WASHINGTON, June 21—The Supreme Court ruled 5 to 4 that states may prohibit nonsectarian church-affiliated universities—even those with religious classes in their curriculum—from receiving state aid. The ruling was a major victory for church-affiliated colleges, and it is likely to be upheld by other state supreme courts.

By a Federal court in Maryland today that ruled in favor of the National Council on Education, which has argued that the cost of testing and recording should be paid by the government.

The survey, conducted by telephone in the last week, turned up 19 delegates previously listed as uncommitted who now support the President and nine who support the former California Governor.

The most important shift came in the 19-member Hawaii delegation, where seven delegates, including Senator Hiram Fong, declared for Mr. Ford and one for Mr. Reagan. Other changes came in Illinois, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Virginia,

Progress Erodes Customs of Ancient Nigerian City

By JOHN DARTON

KANO, Nigeria—A throng fewer in number and smaller in size, camel caravans still trek here from across the Sahara to a final watering hole inside the walled city. The drivers unload dates and salts and potash, spread them on a blanket and barter them for richly embroidered cloth. Beyond the walls, in the burgeoning commercial section called the Township, businessmen come in daily by jet from Rome and Cairo, dine at the Magway Water restaurant, which has three chlorinated swimming pools and a miniature golf course, and haggle over contracts. Kano, the city on the desert's edge that was the commercial center of the ancient western Sudan and the stepping stone for Islam into Africa, is adjusting to the 20th century—adjusting, not succumbing.

The New York Times/June 22, 1976

Women Now Take Taxis
Lately some women here have even been taking taxis and it has not caused a ripple. In a culture where many women are kept in seclusion, known as purdah, that is social revolution. It was only a little more than a decade ago, at a time when there were elections in Nigeria, that southern politicians, harnostering the north, in helicopters to impress the populace, saw the tactic backfire: The northern politicians charged that the vehicles afforded forbidden glimpses of women. "Kano is progressing," said Alhaji Ibrahim el-Yakubu, the state commissioner for information. "It's not the same city it was 2,000 years ago." He paused for an afterthought: "Or even 10 years ago."

to scamper up one side and down the other. City Seems to Rise
As the enclosure recedes, year by year, it is as if the old city itself is rising up from the desert. The city is Old Testament Jerusalem in style, with huts, compounds and palaces built entirely of ocher mud. Some are brightly painted, others etched in geometric designs. The palaces have pointed turrets and tiny square windows in walls two feet thick—protection against the searing heat.

The 11-mile stretch of mud wall that surrounds the old city is crumbling and eroding. Since the early 16th century it has attracted chroniclers, beginning with Leo Africanus, the Moorish vagabond, and has repelled most invaders. In 1903, when a British expeditionary force conquered Kano by locating a flimsy gate, the wall stood 40 to 50 feet high and was 100 feet thick at the base. It had moats filled with thorn bushes, ingenious gateways, protected lookouts for sentries and terraces for horsemen to gallop around, protected by a continuous battlement. Since then, the wall has been pilfered for building material and pounded down by the brief but torrential rains. In most sections the wall is now a mound of dirt no higher than 10- or 20 feet, small enough for a goat.

The twisting streets swarm with goats, laden donkeys, pushcarts, Hausa girls bejeweled and bearing calabashes on their heads, and Tuareg nomads—fiery-looking figures in black turbans, and indigo robes with veils drawn across their faces and four-foot-long curved swords dangling at their sides. From the minaret of the central mosque, from which the city spreads below like a mammoth sand sculpture, one sees scattered glints of reflected sunlight. These are from metal roofs, another concession to modernity. "It's the first thing people buy when they get money," a local businessman says of the roofs.

Kano was the home of Murtala Ramat Muhammed, the head of state who was assassinated in an attempted coup four months ago. He is buried just outside of town, in a simple grave. It is visited frequently. When his body was returned, people wept in the streets and chanted "la ilaha illallah Muhammad rasulillah"—"there is no god but Allah and Muhammad is his messenger."

Anger over the death of the native son is more intense here than in other parts of the country, but it is mixed with the fatalism of the Koran. In pride, Kano has named a hospital a boy-levee and a government building after the general; in rage, it has plastered everywhere "wanted" posters for two alleged plotters of the coup. "My nephew was able to unite Nigeria for the first time," said Alhaji Muhammadu Idris Wada, the general's uncle, sitting in his office in a compound that betokened large wealth. "Nigeria is closer to one country now than it has ever been."

The most powerful figure in Kano is the Emir, Alhaji Ado Bayero, the traditional leader and spiritual father of some four million people. His is the richest emirate in the state, surpassing those of Kassarau, Hadejia and Gombe. The Emir lives in a 450-year-old palace, painted simply on the outside, furnished lavishly inside. He drives a baby-blue Rolls-Royce whose horn emits an undulating sound to imitate the kakaki, the long horns that are blown whenever he appears.

During the festival of Sallah, the emirate's district and village heads assemble in front of the palace in flowing robes and elaborate turbans. A display of horsemanship is then offered before thousands. At the climax the Emir stands alone while waves of horsemen gallop at him at full speed and stop within feet. It is a symbolic show: They could kill him, but chose not to. He rules by their consent.

An Epidemic of Fear
The Emir's powers, once absolute, have been eroded over the years in a series of delicate confrontations with the neutral Government. But his dominion runs deeper. "When a state governor comes by, the people turn and gawk," said an old-time resident. "But when the Emir comes out, they fall to the ground on their bellies." During emergencies the Emir's powers, once absolute, have been eroded over the years in a series of delicate confrontations with the neutral Government. But his dominion runs deeper. Syrian and Libyan Troops of Arab Peace Force Arrive in Beirut

M. MARKHAM
New York Times

BEIRUT, June 21—Syrian and Libyan troops as the vanguard of a League peacekeeping force arrived in Beirut today and took positions around Beirut's newly opened airport.

The troops, about equally divided between Syrians and Libyans, arrived shortly after midnight, hidden through the Bekaa Valley, a Christian hill town in the artist-dominant eastern suburb of Beirut.

The troops, led by the Syrian Major Abdel Moneim, who has been the liaison in the conflict between the Syrian force in Lebanon and the guerrillas, the peacekeeping force is expected to be in place within 15 days.

Units said that a cease-fire agreement negotiated by Jalloud stipulated that the airport would be open to civilian needs and that the importation of arms would be permitted.

It also reported a partial withdrawal of Syrian expeditionary forces from Lebanon, estimated at 13,000 men, in the Beirut area of Sidon and

Officials here said they could not recall any previous occasion when the United States Government had communicated either

American policy is to avoid said this policy remained un-

Jalloud Chides Other Arabs
Special to The New York Times
DAMASCUS, Syria, June 21
— Prime Minister Abdel Salam Jalloud of Libya today chided other Arab nations that were supposed to send troops to Lebanon as part of the Arab peacekeeping force but have so far failed to do so.

Without naming the other nations, Major Jalloud, who was instrumental in arranging the new cease-fire in Lebanon, seemed clearly to be criticizing Saudi Arabia, the Sudan and Algeria. These countries, under the Arab League resolution authorizing the peacekeeping force, were supposed to join with Libyan, Syrian and Palestine Liberation Organization units in the pan-Arab force.
Mahmoud Riad, the secretary general of the Arab League, said before leaving here for Cairo today that Sudanese and Saudi troops were expected to be all on the bases of justice and the legitimate objectives for which the Palestinian revolution was launched.

WASHINGTON, June 21 (AP)
—The State Department confirmed today that a message of thanks for Palestinian help in guarding those being evacuated over the weekend had been sent by indirect means to the

and other vehicles flashed "V" signs to passers-by.
A Palestinian journalist, listening to the jubilant gunfire, remarked: "I don't know what they're celebrating. This is still the Syrians. As the Arabs say, they go out the window and come back through the door."
At the approaches to the Beirut airport, tough-looking Syrian regulars in camouflage uniforms said they had not yet received orders to pull out. A newly arrived member of the peacekeeping force, wearing the green band around his beret, was effusively greeted with kisses on the cheeks from the Syrian soldiers who have held the sand-dune fringes of the airport for some time.

The boulevard leading to the airport is deserted, littered with shrapnel and shell casings.
Three hundred and eighty employees of Middle East Airlines, including the company's general manager, Assad Nasser, have been stranded at its airport

headquarters throughout the siege.
Mr. Nasser told the besieged employees today that he hoped the airport would open on Wednesday. The airline has sent the bulk of its fleet to Athens.
The agreement negotiated by Major Jalloud reportedly calls also for the release of a number of pro-Syrian figures who were arrested in Beirut shortly after Syrian armored forces thrust deep into Lebanon on June 6 in an apparent attempt to force an end of the 14-month-old civil war between Lebanese Christians and an alliance of Palestinian guerrillas and Moslem infants.

Those who are held include officials of the Syrian-run Saiga Palestinian organization and the Syrian Bath party and Brig. Gen. Misbah Budeiry, former chief of staff of the Palestine Liberation Army.
Zuhair Mohsin, the As Saiga chief, greeted the peacekeeping force when it drove up to the airport from Khalde, using a small side road that leads through sand dunes up to the runway. Mr. Mohsin said that he had been at the airport throughout the siege with his men and that he hoped to return to Beirut.

In other developments, the British Embassy postponed for the fourth day plans to evacuate Britons and other foreigners from Beirut by road convoy to Damascus. The reason was security conditions along the route, roughly the same one taken by the peacekeeping unit.
The Palestinian press agency,
Wafa, said that Farouk Khaddoui, the unofficial foreign minister of the Palestine Liberation Organization, had received an indirect word of thanks from Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger for Palestinian assistance in the evacuation of 263 Americans, Britons and other foreign nationals by a United States Navy landing craft yesterday.

Mr. Khaddoumi was said to have received a letter from the Egyptian Foreign Minister handed to him by Ahmad Lotfi Matwalli, the Egyptian Ambassador.
Wafa quoted the letter as saying that Mr. Kissinger wishes to inform the Palestinian leadership of his appreciation of the great and constructive role undertaken by the Palestinians.
Mr. Khaddoumi responded, through Wafa, as follows, according to the agency:
"In spite of our basic and principal differences with the U.S. Government, which takes

Worst Drought Since 1921 Threatens All Sectors of the French Economy

Special to The New York Times
PARIS, June 21 — France is facing its worst drought since 1921 and it affects not only the agriculture industry but now threatens the economy at large, just as it was seen to be picking up again.

The drought is also being felt in parts of southern England and Belgium, but with less dramatic effects.

In France, the absence of rain—in some areas since last November—has hit hardest in such important farming regions as Brittany and Normandy, where what the meteorologists call the "rain deficit" is now at 80 percent.

As a result, anemic wheat, corn and barley crops will be producing only half the normal yield. Vegetables and fruit, too, will be scarce, and because of the lack of fodder, breeders are slaughtering cattle ahead of schedule. In Normandy, some breeders have let their animals graze in the grain fields for lack of grass. In sugar production from beets, forecasts are for a drop of 25 percent.

Food Prices Rise
It is already certain that food prices will go up. The only question is by how much. In Paris over the last weekend, the price of tomatoes jumped from 90 cents a kilo to $1.50 and cherries went from 80 cents to $1.20.

France, an exporter of agricultural produce, will also now have less to sell abroad. While forecasts for exports were for a sugar production this year of four million tons, present expectations are for only three million tons. Since domestic consumption is two million tons for exporting, one half the anticipated figure.

These prospects, together with comparable fears for Britain's production, sent the world sugar futures quotation sharply up on the London market early this week. The October position closed a little more than $3 above the preweekend level, at $110 a ton.

The British areas hit by the drought are East Anglia and parts of southwestern England. There the dry winter produced a poor potato crop. "Poor winter potatoes were dearer than cheap oranges," one man commented. Winter wheat and spring cereals also suffered. But on the whole, food prices were described as stable, partly due to imports.

The French Government, over the past months, pledged several times that it would at least maintain the income level of farmers, and President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing stood by these promises when he said, at last week's Cabinet meeting: "We will not abandon the farmers when faced with the plague of the drought."

But that means higher subsidies for farming, together with emergency aid enabling farmers' operations were back to normal at all airports across the country. Most airports were open for regular traffic.

A spokesman for the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association said in a telephone interview from Montreal, however, that pilots had been instructed to return to their jobs only if they felt it was safe to do so.

CONTROLLERS BACK IN CANADIAN STRIKE
TORONTO, June 20 (AP)—Air traffic controllers returned to work this evening, following walkouts that closed at least eight major Canadian airports in a dispute over the use of the French language by Quebec air traffic controllers, authorities said.

Canada's two major airlines, Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Air, canceled their flights within Canada when the pilots and controllers defied court injunctions and did not report for work.

A spokesman for the Transport Department said that by 5:30 P.M. air traffic control operations were back to normal at all airports across the country. Most airports were open for regular traffic.

A spokesman for the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association said in a telephone interview from Montreal, however, that pilots had been instructed to return to their jobs only if they felt it was safe to do so.

Denver Post Shifting Issues
DENVER, June 21 (AP)—The Denver Post will introduce a Saturday morning issue Sept. 11, the newspaper has announced. The morning paper will supplant the present Saturday afternoon Post.

to receive compensation for up to 30 percent of their losses. The likely source of the extra money will be new taxes, since the current budget is already very tight.

The expected climb in food prices risks reaccelerating an inflation rate that Finance Minister Jean-Pierre Fourcade had said he has under control and even hoped to bring down from its 10 percent annual level.

The anticipated loss of revenue from agricultural exports was seen likely to limit the Government in its efforts to curb the inflation. Latest reports indicated a slight decrease in unemployment, still at about 5 percent of the labor force.

Higher French food prices will also have an effect on food prices throughout the European Common Market. The Market countries—France, Britain, Italy, Germany, Belgium, Netherlands, Luxembourg, Ireland and Denmark—establish common floor prices yearly for agricultural produce on the basis of a compromise between national levels. When one goes up, the common price also rises.

One Common Market official said the organization had no predictions yet on the effect of the drought on international commodity prices, pending the receipt of a report from Paris. But the French Agriculture Ministry said it was too early for assembling any solid data because "it might still rain next week." And the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development here was only beginning to study the question in preparation for a meeting of agriculture experts June 29.

While West Germany's early wheat harvest was predicted to be moderate, Belgium's early wheat was notably described as having suffered. Hardest hit in Belgium has been the fishing. The water level in the rivers is very low and the fish die.

The same has happened here in The Seine, where tens of thousands of dead fish have been clogging the approaches to the canal locks. The fish used to swim below the layer of pollutants from industry. With the drop in the water level, the passageway for the fish has become too shallow.

Meanwhile, in a few areas of France, as well as Britain, there was already a shortage of public water supplies. At St. Mards, in the Seine-et-Marne department east of Paris, volunteers emptied the local tank, holding only 500 cubic meters overnight by pumping the water from a well.

In southern England, some local authorities announced that water would be rationed soon, with hoses, pipes, and car washing to be banned. In France, water rationing has been instituted in some parts of Brittany.

France's major cities, including Paris, will not be affected because they all sit atop practically inexhaustible underground lakes.

Another consequence of the drought has been a 20 percent drop in electricity production from water-powered plants, according to the state electricity monopoly.

It announced that as of today, voltage on the national grid would be reduced by 5 percent. This means that television screens will be dimmer and lamps shine less brightly. Certain industries, such as the Creusot-Loire steelworks, have been informed of powercuts for several hours daily.

Still another consequence of the drought has been an increase in forest fires, over the last year, with 9,000 hectares of woods reported destroyed.

The only people appearing to benefit are the winegrowers and people concerned with tourism.

"The sun makes people think about their vacations," said State Secretary for Tourism Jacques Médecin. As to the vintners, they hope for exceptional grapes, because of the intensive, uninterrupted sunshine for so many months.

The long-term predictions from meteorologists were that the drought would last until September. Forecasts in increasing numbers, have been seen entering their churches to burn candles and pray that the rain will come again.

Atomic Unit, in Split Vote, Backs Reactor for Spain

By DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 21—The Senate today approved the export of a nuclear power reactor to Spain, a move that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission over the strong dissent of one of the four commissioners. The United States previously had licensed the export of eight reactors to Spain, two of which are now generating electricity. The dissenting commissioner, Dr. Victor Gilinsky, said he opposed the granting of an export license for the $37 million Westinghouse reactor involved in today's decision because the terms drawn up contained "the vital flaw." He said there were inadequate safeguards to prevent its use for the development of nuclear weapons. Dr. Gilinsky had urged a modification of the license so as to require Spain to use only United States uranium as fuel. This would mean, he said, that "plutonium—a nuclear explosive—which will be produced in the operation of the reactor," would be subject to the extra controls spelled out in a special treaty between the United States and Spain. Reprocessing of used uranium fuel from nuclear reactors includes the extraction of plutonium, which can be used for making nuclear weapons. "Practical Realities" Cited The commission majority said that the course proposed by Dr. Gilinsky, "while evidencing a concern we all share over the risks associated with reprocessing, would not adequately address the practical realities we now face." "While unilateral commission action here may seem appealing," the majority continued, "in the end it would be misleading to imply or assert that it would be an effective means for advancing U.S. non-proliferation goals." During the last few months an increasing number of government and academic experts have become concerned that present policies aimed at encouraging the use of plutonium and development of breeder reactors will weaken existing international controls and could lead to the spread of nuclear weapons. Last week, for example, a House-Senate conference committee approved an amendment to the Foreign Aid Bill applying a limited curb on both exporting and importing of plutonium reprocessing equipment.

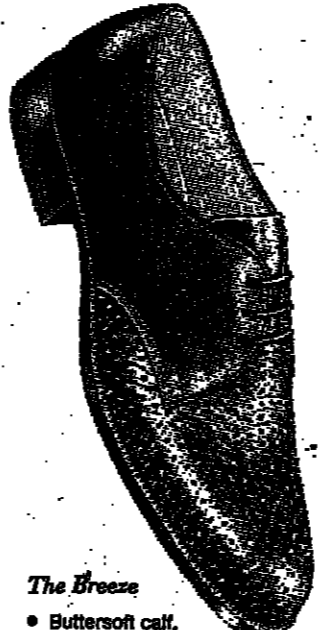

First Split Vote of Approval
A commission spokesman said this was the first time that an export license for nuclear equipment or fuel had been approved by a split vote since the commission was created in January 1975 as the successor to the Atomic Energy Commission. The spokesman said there had been 89 unanimous approvals by the commission. The majority opinion, by Marcus A. Rowden, the commission chairman, Edward A. Mason and Richard T. Kennedy, and the dissent by Dr. Gilinsky, were subjected to lengthy debates and negotiations. The 68-page decision made public today, according to Dr. Gilinsky, was the 11th draft of the document.

Senate Ratifies Pact on Buses
WASHINGTON, June 21—The Senate today ratified a treaty giving the United States the use of military bases in Spain for five more years. The vote was 84 to 11. In a separate resolution, adopted by a vote of 91 to 4, the Senate urged the new Government of King Juan Carlos I to move Spain toward democracy. Some Senators had sought to delay action on the treaty until it was clear whether Spain would act to free itself from the repressive rule imposed by Franco. The resolution expressing the Senate's hopes for Spain was agreed on as a compromise substitute for delaying the treaty. The treaty provides $1.2 billion in economic aid—most of it in loans—in exchange for continued United States use of one naval facility, at Rota, and three air bases. The resolution of ratification sets forth a United States hope that the treaty will serve to foster Spanish progress toward democracy, participation in "institutions of Western European political and economic cooperation," and eventual cooperation in the mutual defense obligations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

VIOLENCE SHAKES GUATEMALA AGAIN

Unity Brought by Earthquake Ends in an Upsurge of Political Murders

By ALAN RIDING

Special to The New York Times
 GUATEMALA—Four months after an earthquake killed almost 23,000 Guatemalans and briefly united this embittered nation, an upsurge of violence is offering macabre evidence that politics here is back to normal.

Once again, newspapers are dedicating their front pages to photographs and reports of deaths and disappearances, while politicians, diplomats and businessmen are reinforcing their personal security.

The list of terrorist actions since the disaster is growing: one assassination and two attempted assassinations of leading left-wing politicians, the murder of a right-wing military officer, the killing of more than a dozen lesser political figures, and the kidnapping of the daughter of a cement magnate. For the first time in four years, an extreme leftist guerrilla group—the so-called Guatemalan Army of the Poor—has also emerged and is saying it carried out some of the recent assaults and murders.

A History of Violence

Political terrorism is not new to Guatemala. The United States-backed ouster of the left-leaning Government of President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman by Col. Carlos Castillo Armas in 1954 permanently scarred the country and much of the political violence today can be traced to the disputes of two decades ago. Responding to the right-wing repression that followed that coup, leftist guerrilla groups appeared in the Guatemalan countryside early in the 60's. Their activities produced a tough military reaction and hundreds of peasants were killed in the eastern province of Zacapa in 1967 before the guerrillas were forced to seek asylum in Guatemala City.

The re-emergence of these rebels as urban guerrillas in 1968 led to the creation of several extreme right-wing terrorist groups that began striking at moderate as well as extreme leftist activists. When Gen. Carlos Arana Osorio was elected President in 1970, "pacification" of the left became government policy.

Within two years, the combined forces of the army, police and right-wing paramilitary groups had effectively eliminated the leftist guerrilla movement as well as killed numerous outspoken political opponents of the regime.

Fraud Secures Victory

But tensions again rose in March 1974 when the Government resorted to fraud to insure the electoral victory of the right-wing candidate, Gen. Kjell Laugerud Garcia, over the presidential nominee of a leftist coalition.

"Since the elections, more than 100 coalition politicians have been murdered," said Manuel Colom Argueta, the former mayor of Guatemala City, who was wounded during a right-wing attempt against his life last March 26. Another 20,000 peasants have died or disappeared over the past two years.

Many of the disappearances reported daily by Guatemala's newspapers appear to have no political motive, although a Committee of Relatives of Disappeared Persons disbanded after its organizer was murdered by rightists two years ago.

Now efforts are being made by church, labor and university groups to form a nonpartisan national front against repression with the aim of pressing the Government to clamp down on right-wing terrorist gangs.

Although General Laugerud reached the presidency with conservative support, over the last two years he has tried to separate his administration from the extreme right as represented by former President Arana and the present Vice President, Mario Sandoval Alarcón.

Rightists Step Up Attacks

But as President Laugerud has sought the support of centrist groups, the extreme right has stepped up its campaign of attacks and threats against leftist politicians, apparently fearing a strong opposition showing in the presidential elections scheduled for March 1978.

In recent months, the President's bid for greater independence has also been complicated by the emergence of the Guatemalan Army of the Poor since many senior military officers who do not wish to be associated with the extreme right nevertheless feel that Communist groups should not be tolerated.

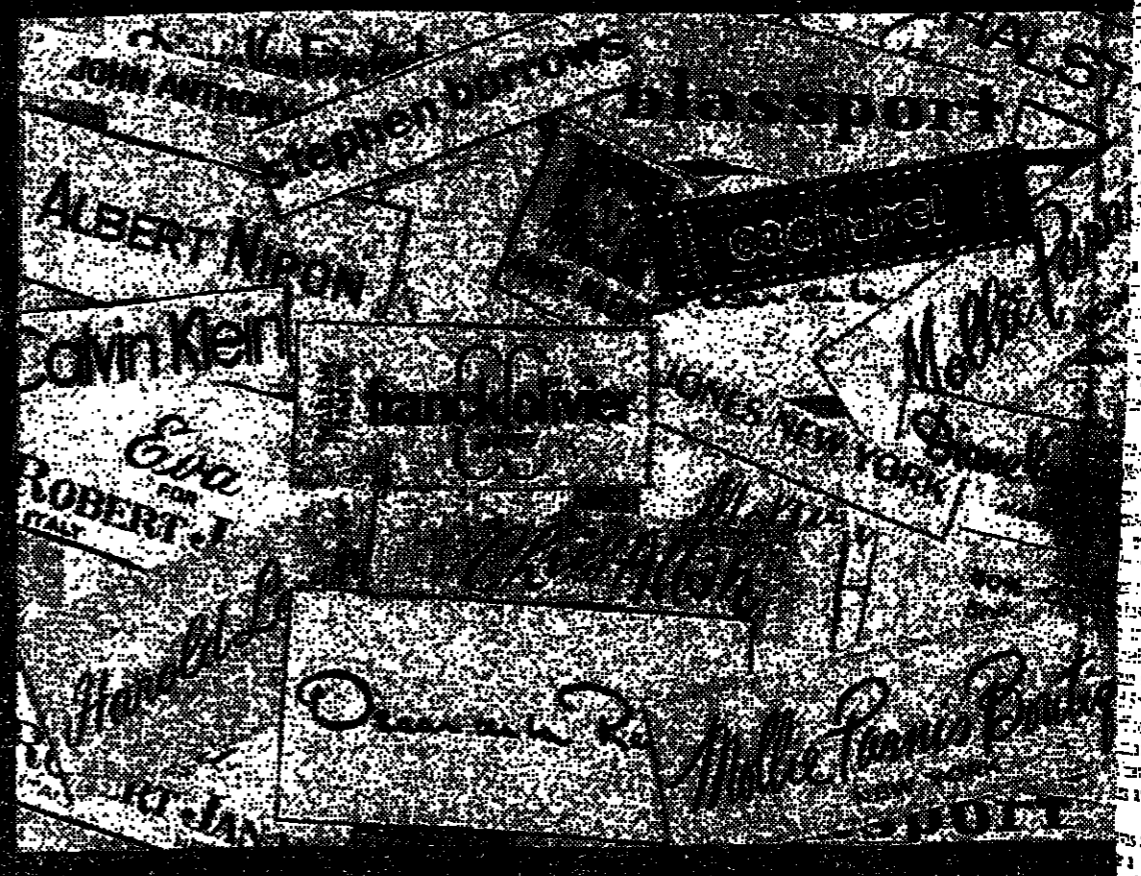

The possible impact of the earthquake disaster on Guatemalan politics is still unclear, although politics is already evident in the activities of the National Reconstruction Committee. After President Laugerud ignored right-wing pressure and named a liberal officer, Gen. Ricardo Peralta Méndez, to head the committee, conservative military and civilian groups have limited their cooperation with the reconstruction effort.

The Outlook for Italy

Communist Gains Undermine Char Of Renewed Government of the Center

By FLORA LEWIS

ROME, June 21 — If the trends established in incomplete results of Italy's election hold firm, the country's political future could be more precarious. Although the political arithmetic was not yet clear, the chance of renewed center government by a center or center-left coalition was undermined. The prospects were bewildering even to politicians, and they were hard put to speculate how a future government might be formed with even the minimum solidity needed to haul the country out of its economic quagmire.

There was much talk of a "radicalization" of politics among commentators and politicians. By that, they meant that the strength of the ends had grown against a sagging middle and the massiveness by which the Christian Democrats had managed to dominate 33 successive anti-Communist governments no longer appeared possible.

It was, said a labor leader, Bruno Storti, a logical result of the campaign, which stressed more intensively than at any time since the 1948 election the choice was between fear of Communism and a demand for basic change. The voters responded to the stark arguments, moving in almost equal proportions away from the center toward left and right.

Unstable U.S. Ally Seen Thus, the Christian Democrats could say, as they did, that they were right to focus on warning against the danger of Communism and that, whatever the grumbles, Italians still preferred them to the unknown. On this score, the threat by the United States to assess relations with Italy if the Communists entered the government seemed to have had effect.

But the Communists could also say, as they did, that more and more Italians looked to them to bring the "purification and renewal" for which the country yearned. And on this score, the United States controls in Italy a more uncertain and possibly more unstable ally than ever before.

For the Communists, it was a major vindication of the policy of their leader, Enrico Berlinguer, whose turn toward moderation and a government of "national emergency" became more and more determined as the campaign progressed. Critics inside his party, who have been muted, are likely to be silenced now.

Mr. Berlinguer appeared before the crowd earlier, however, and told them that the result was a good one and would mean a shift to the left in Parliament. He added that the result underscored the need for a broad coalition if a split in the country was to be avoided.

KISSINGER WARNS WEST ON ECONOMY

Urges O.E.C.D. Members to Tighten Ties in Dealing With Reds and Third World

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

PARIS, June 21 — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger urged the Western industrial powers today to meet the world's "new and demanding challenges" by cooperating more closely in dealing with Communist and third-world nations.

In a generally optimistic review of the West's economic situation, Mr. Kissinger underscored Washington's view that only through more effective political and economic coordination can the industrial democracies cope with the challenges raised by the world's poor nations and by the state-run Communist economies.

Addressing the opening session of the annual ministers meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, Mr. Kissinger also called upon the Western nations to accelerate their own efforts in energy research and conservation where, he said, progress has "fallen far short of our needs."

On relations with the third world, Mr. Kissinger broke no major new ground. He said that in recent months the United States has "strained our domestic processes" to come up with proposals to meet real problems in our relations with the developing world.

He said the Western countries should improve their coordination at international conferences to insure that new policies get adequate discussion. He cited as an example of poor coordination the recent United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Kenya where an American plan for a national bank for resources was narrowly defeated. He said the plan for the bank would be introduced again.

Members of most of the 23 other delegations to the conference were said to be surprised by the emphasis Mr. Kissinger placed on dealing with the Communist world. In recent years, great emphasis has been placed on relations with the Western world and with the developing nations, but there has been virtually no formal discussion of East-West trade.

But Mr. Kissinger, noting that trade between the Soviet bloc and the member states of the O.E.C.D. had increased by nearly 400 percent in the last four years, said "a new dimension of economic interaction between East and West has begun to take shape."

Continuing Policies In Mr. Kissinger's view—according to his aides—the West should be able to coordinate its economic policies in such a way as to gain some political benefit both from trade with the Communists and with the developing countries, groups that both often criticize the West.

"Our democratic systems have disproved the doctrine that only repression and authoritarianism could insure human well-being," he said. "On the contrary, the industrial democracies assembled here have demonstrated conclusively that it is in freedom that men achieve the economic advance of which ages have dreamed."

Mr. Kissinger said "there is some irony in the fact that as the years of our economic system, both the socialist countries and the developing countries have turned to us to help them advance more rapidly."

Facing New Challenges "Today it is the industrial democracies which primarily have the resources, the managerial genius, the advanced technology, and the dedication needed for sustained economic development under any political system," Mr. Kissinger said.

Mr. Kissinger said "today the world economy faces new and demanding challenges" to improve "our performance in areas where we have already begun to work together" and "to create mechanisms of cooperation to deal with new issues and opportunities."

In his discussion of relations with the Communists, Mr. Kissinger made no concrete proposals. These will be put forth next month, he said, at another session of the organization. But he outlined certain principles that should be considered.

Communist countries "must not be permitted to use their centrally directed systems for unfair advantage; nor should they be permitted to play off the industrial democracies against each other through selective political pressure," he said.

A supporter of the Christian Democrats displays front page of the party paper, indicating victory at the polls.

Christian Democrats Leading In Italy's Votes as Reds Also Gain

Continued From Page 1, Col. 5 Political force Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had warned that if the Communists gained a role in the Cabinet of this North Atlantic Treaty nation, Washington would have to reassess its relations with Rome.

Since the Communists fall short of their goal of a majority, the task for President Giovanni Leone, a Christian Democrat, becomes easier. He can now follow tradition and call on the Christian Democrats to try to form a new administration.

Since the crisis that led to the elections, Italy has been led by a caretaker Government under Prime Minister Aldo Moro. Whether the Christian Democrats will turn to Mr. Moro to try again remains to be seen.

Despite failure to overtake the Christian Democrats, the Communists clearly consolidated their hold among Italian voters and emerged from the elections in a strengthened position. They have now gained votes in every national election in the past quarter of a century.

Bid by Communist Leader The big surprise was the gain by the Christian Democrats, who made such a strong showing that even their leaders were amazed. Several Christian Democrats saw the vote as a mandate from the voters to keep the Communists out of the government.

Enrico Berlinguer, the leader of the Communist Party, agreed that there was a "recuperation" by the Christian Democrats at the expense of their small allies, but he said the results still showed that the nation was moving left. He made a new bid for a government of national unity, including the Communists.

"The era when governments could govern by an anti-Communist bias is over," he said. Benigno Zaccagnini, the leader of the Christian Democrats, who have dominated Italian politics for 30 years, called his party's vote a "notable advance." The party's newspaper put out a special edition with the headline: "Victory for the D.C.," the Christian Democrats.

In giving more votes to the Communists, their supporters wanted to demonstrate their backing for the Berlinguer line of moderation and for the party's insistence on a formal role in government.

In giving more support to the Christian Democrats, their supporters sought to express their fear of the Communists, but also to give the dominant party one more chance to reform, to find new faces and to meet the nation's needs.

It was clear from the outset of the campaign that the main debate would focus on whether the Italians wanted the Communists inside the Cabinet or not.

The "Christian Democrats, concerned about losing their place as the nation's largest party, repeatedly stressed the European nations and Japan in industrial trade with the Soviet Union and has not been able to use trade as a political lever for giving the Berlinguer line a shot against its rival. He has been criticized that because of a lack of coordination, Western countries that opposed Soviet actions in Angola were nevertheless unable to use their economic power to bring pressure on Moscow.

10 Reported Slain in Pretoria Rioting

in Atteridgeville saying, "Don't pray—fight to support Soweto," moved in quickly by truck and helicopter.

By noon, the security forces, armed with submachine guns and grenade launchers, had sealed off the black communities by blocking the single road leading to each. As smoke drifted from charred wrecks, the police picked their way through fragments of glass lining the streets.

As in Soweto last week, the rioters' fury was directed at all symbols of authority and at what were seen as white-dominated institutions—the Government beer halls and bottle stores, schools, offices and the Bantu Administration and the bus lines between the isolated enclaves in the economy of South Africa. Significantly, as in the Johannesburg townships, no churches were attacked.

The black people in Mabopane were hardly communicative to white foreign reporters. Several said they did not know how the trouble began or who was responsible. "There are many people here from some place else," said a young man, suggesting that there had been agitation. Another, pressed to answer a question whether the rioting would bring reform or revolution, looked for support to a friend and replied, "I do not think so, we need the buses to get to work."

The most serious of today's disorders occurred in Mabopane, where police reported a two persons killed. Several residents said this afternoon.

The New York Times/June 22, 1976
Rioting flared in Mabopane, Atteridgeville and Mamelodi near Pretoria. Disturbances began last week in Soweto township near Johannesburg.

that they believed that four persons had died after shots were fired by policemen moving through the township, which has more than 100,000 residents.

At Kalafoong Hospital, the region's major hospital for blacks, Sias Matlala, a 29-year-old man, explained from a stretcher how he was wounded in the thigh and hand by the police. "I was doing nothing," he said. "They shot up without warning. I was just standing at the bus stop on the way to work. I don't know why they shot."

By early afternoon, there was no more shooting in Mabopane. An Alouette helicopter circled the red dirt streets where clusters of people stood, mostly expressionless. One youth raised his fist in a black power salute to a passing car. Meanwhile several hundred policemen, most of them white, cruised through the township in open trucks. At one point, a convoy of trucks stopped and two black policemen, one in uniform, the other in plainclothes dragged a youth from one of the bungalows and threw him roughly into a van.

By mid-afternoon, police officials said they thought the worst was over, the charred remains of buses lay on the road as the principal sign of the morning's outburst. Four buses had been burned while 40 others had smashed windows. Four private cars were also being overturned and gutted on the main road running past tidy bungalows, mud hovels and an occasional modern suburban-style house.

The stores on the main road had barred windows and appeared not to have been looted in an open meadow a traveling. At one point during the disorder, after the police arrived, a group of several hundred young people moved across the open country surrounding the township to a white farm six miles away owned by Nathan Liembzn. They burned the farm after taking weapons, a television set and $3,000 from the 59-year-old farmer, who was beaten but not seriously injured. The incident was the first confirmed attack here in which rioters attacked anyone in a legally white area.

Mr. Liembzn and two women in the house were able to walk five miles to a neighboring farm. There, white families assembled with rifles guarding against raids.

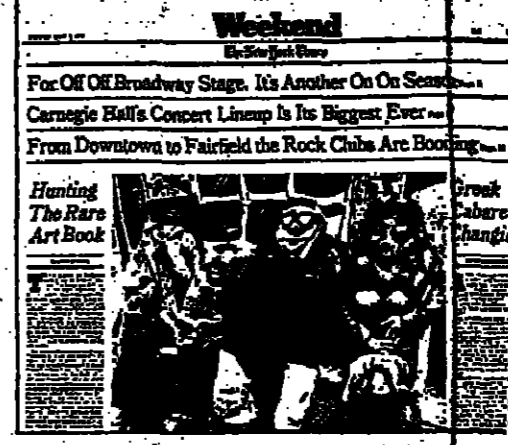

Col. W. P. Van Wyck of the Criminal Investigation Division said he felt sure that the troubles here were pre-arranged, citing the coincidental eruptions in townships far away. He noted that the issue of teaching in the Afrikaans language that touched off last week's rioting did not exist in the Pretoria township schools where all instruction is in English.

As he talked of the day's events with white officers, a group of black policemen sat alone at a corner of a parking area. They were asked what had happened in the morning. One of them replied that crowds of young people began throwing stones. They were fierce and warlike," said the officer, who held a grenade launcher. He said that while the police had tear gas, they could not use it because of too much wind. "In Soweto," said the black officer, "there was an educational problem, but here I don't know what these people want." At that point a white policeman politely informed reporters that they were not to talk to black officers.

While most of the day's disorders were confined largely to the Pretoria area—and these while furious—scattered less intense and shorter than last week's riots—there were also reports of several other scattered incidents: At a black teachers college in the Quaqwa homeland near Lesotho, a laboratory was burned. In the Bophuthatswana Homeland schools were closed because of reported tension. And in Johannesburg itself a black man was shot and subdued after he attacked two white men and a white woman with an ax shouting "Freedom for Africa."

White Alarm Over Racial Violence, Most White South Africans Seem to Support the Status Quo

BY F. BURNS
 South Africa, in the dusty, dusty away, bursts signaled the riots that have been the most violent since the Voortrekker, the Afrikaner, a hill overlooking the capital city, Es-sen, related as before marble the great white forefathers to the Transvaal was asked as the Govern-ment to still the "As I feel it," said, gesturing, and keep quiet, and the business of the so slim," he said. "I think what has happened these last few days is going to happen again and again, because blacks see it as the only way they're ever going to wrest political power from whites." He added: "I have an uneasy feeling that when it comes down to it we—all of us, the liberals as well as Mr. Vorster and the members of the Cabinet—are going to be as intractable as the Rhodesians appear now. It's very sad, because this country could be so strong if we could somehow progress to a really multiracial society." On the rugby field, where the university team was practicing scrimmages under floodlights, a tumbled player who gave his name as Cliff paused to express his contempt for the students who protested. "You can take it from me they were a minority, a tiny minority," he said. Two of his teammates, Ian and Eric, agreed that the Government should institute some reforms in the conditions of black life. "I think this language business has to be changed," said Cliff, referring to a regulation requiring the use of Afrikaans as a teaching language in some black schools, which touched off the initial violence. Other changes the three considered reasonable were a program to provide electricity and hot running water in all black homes. At present, in Soweto, only about 25 percent of the homes have electricity and not many more have running hot water.

The students' suggestions were similar to those made by guests at a weekend lunch in the expensive Johannesburg suburb of Houghton. The hosts, though English-speaking, described themselves humorously as "punko Nats," referring to the ruling Nationalist Party, which draws its support overwhelmingly from the Afrikaner population. As the lunch proceeded, the host, a business executive, joined with his wife and oldest son, a doctor, in expressing horror at some of the violence pictured in the local newspapers. The morning paper had carried photographs of police firing at demonstrators armed only with stones, and of school boys in blazers and ties attempting to defend themselves with garbage can lids. However, there was universal condemnation of the Witwatersrand protesters, and an acknowledgement by the younger son, a student, that some of the objections to the march boiled down to a feeling that in a confrontation between blacks and the white authority, no white belonged on the side of the blacks. There was also a consensus that the Government could not yield on the essence of apartheid. The hostess confessed that there had been moments of real alarm in the household when news came through that the rioting had spread to Alexandra, a township entirely surrounded by the white suburbs of northern

Johannesburg. At that moment, she said, she "thanked God for the Nats, for standing between us and them." A common feature of the conversations with whites was the use of pejoratives to refer to blacks. Among conservative Afrikaners, especially from rural areas, it was not uncommon to hear the word "kaffir" used, although a judge recently ruled that it was insulting in a case brought by a black for wrongful dismissal. In English-speaking households, the word "natives," or "Afs" were common. Many intellectual Afrikaners, such as the Rev. Beyers Naude, head of the Christian Institute of South Africa, are vociferous critics of apartheid. However it was in conversations with Afrikaners, whose votes have kept the Nationalist Government in power for 28 years, that the most outspokenly conservative views were expressed. One of the most forthright proponents of a tough Government line in the riots was Seve Enepe, an electrical contractor who spent yesterday morning on the roadside west of Pretoria, watching the latest outbreak of rioting through binoculars. As army helicopters clattered over the dusty township of Atteridge, Mr. Enepe declared that the riots had broken out because the Government was "not tough enough."

In common with many conservatives, Mr. Enepe said he believed that South Africa's problems had nothing to do with apartheid or the supposed grievances of the blacks, but resulted from Communist subversion. "There are Cubans in Cape Town," he said, as the sound of a rifle shot or grenade launcher echoed across the field. "I know, I heard it from an Indian." The opposition to any weakening of apartheid is strong even among immigrants. One German businessman who emigrated after World War II told a neighbor in the coffee shop of one of Johannesburg's luxury hotels that it was hypocritical to express anguish for the blacks who died in the riots. "Didn't you people drop an atom bomb on Hiroshima?" he asked.

HARRISES' JUDGE WON'T STEP DOWN

He Rejects Defense Plea to Disqualify Himself as the Trial Opens on Coast

By MARCIA CHAMBERS
Special to The New York Times
LOS ANGELES, June 21—The defense in the trial of William and Emily Harris charged today at the opening of the case that security measures ordered by Superior Court Judge Mark Brandler indicated he was afraid for his safety and thus would not preside fairly over the trial of the two self-styled revolutionaries.

But the judge rejected the defense's request to disqualify himself from hearing the kidnapping, robbery and assault case. He made his ruling before the first panel of 47 prospective jurors entered the courtroom. The security measures include a bullet-proof glass and steel mesh barrier that separates the Harrises and other participants in the trial from the spectator section. Judge Brandler said that the Harrises' co-defendant, Patricia Hearst, would not be "available for a joint trial. While he did not indicate the reasons, Miss Hearst has had her trial officially postponed because she is undergoing psychiatric testing before her sentencing on a Federal conviction of bank robbery.

Shooting Is Recalled

It was on May 16, 1974, one month and a day after the San Francisco bank robbery, that Miss Hearst, who had been kidnapped by the so-called Symbionese Liberation Army, allegedly covered the Harrises' escape from a sporting goods store here when they were about to be arrested on shoplifting charges.

Miss Hearst has virtually conceded that she sent a fusillade of bullets from two automatic guns into the street and at the store. After the incident, the three allegedly commandeered automobiles and kidnapped victims and then fled. They were not seen again until their capture in San Francisco last September.

The judge, in speaking to the prospective jurors about Miss Hearst, said: "Her actions and her conduct will undoubtedly be called to our attention innumerable times. That is why the court wants you to have an awareness that she is a co-defendant."

U.S. Loses in Attempt to Delay Angola Application to Join U.N.

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH
Special to The New York Times
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., June 21—The Ford Administration today lost an intensive behind-the-scenes drive for postponement of Angola's application for membership in the United Nations until after the Republican National Convention in August.

The drive, and its defeat, were disclosed when the 15-member Security Council decided after a private meeting to take up the membership request without delay, scheduling a meeting tomorrow with an all-but-certain prospect of a vote Wednesday.

Reagan Pressing Issue

Mr. Ford's chief rival for the Republican nomination, Ronald Reagan, has used the Angolan issue in his campaign, criticizing the Administration for the victory of the People's Movement for the Liberation of Angola in the West African country's civil war. In the view

Brezhnev and Kekkonen Pledge Wider Political Ties

MOSCOW, June 21 (Reuters)—The Soviet Communist party chief, Leonid I. Brezhnev and President Urho Kekkonen of Finland pledged today to broaden political and economic cooperation between their two countries.

The pledge was contained in a joint statement issued on discussions between the two leaders held just after President Kekkonen arrived in Moscow on an unofficial visit. The president, a frequent visitor and almost alone among non-Communist Western statesmen to win regular praise in the Soviet press, was met at the station by Soviet President Nikolai V. Podgorny and Prime Minister Alexsei N. Kosygin.

Leonard Weinglass, lawyer for Emily Harris, outside courtroom yesterday.

Problem of Fear

By day's end, 29 prospective jurors were eliminated out of a total of 76 that had been summoned to the courtroom. Only one—a middle-aged man—was informed the court that he was biased. He said that he did not think his opinion could be changed by the lawyers. "I don't like the Harrises and I don't like Patty Hearst," he said.

In the morning session, Leonard Weinglass, Mrs. Harris's lawyer, sought to have the 66-year-old judge disqualify himself after he again refused to transfer the trial from the bulletproof courtroom.

"One of the most vexing problems in this case is the problem of fear that has been injected into the community against William and Emily Harris," Mr. Weinglass told the judge. "Most jurors brought into this courtroom will be in fear of these defendants. When they see the bulletproof glass, their fears will be affirmed."

"If the trial of the facts is in fear, we have no hope that the jury will not be in fear," the judge listened carefully to the defense lawyer's 20-minute plea and then denied it. He said that he had no fear of the defendants and would try the case fairly and impartially.

Last month, Judge Brandler ordered the trial to be held in a conventional courtroom, but changed his mind after he received word that a woman, known to the police, had threatened to hold Police Chief Edward Davis and a Superior Court judge hostage to insure the release of the Harrises.

Mr. Weinglass told Judge Brandler that the woman had written six similar letters to other officials, was now under psychiatric care and was a "deeply troubled" person. The judge refused to change his position and denied the requests by the Harrises to examine the woman's letters and to call witnesses at a hearing.

Closing Arguments Begin in 15-Month Trial of the San Quentin 6

Special to The New York Times
SAN RAFAEL, Calif., June 21—Closing arguments began today in the trial of the so-called San Quentin Six, five inmates and a former inmate accused of murder, conspiracy and assault in connection with an alleged escape attempt at San Quentin Prison by George Jackson.

Recalls Instructions to Jury

Today Mr. Herman, who is 39 years old, linked certain aspects of his case to the instructions that Superior Court Judge Henry Broderick read to the jurors last Friday.

Mr. Herman spent considerable time on the instructions regarding "conspiracy" and "aiding and abetting" because, as he acknowledged today, he could not say for sure which of the defendants had committed which murder. He had made the same admission at the start of the trial.

He said that under the legal theory of aiding and abetting, three of the defendants, Luis Talamantez, Willie Tate and David Johnson, were liable for four of the murders, and two of the defendants, Johnny Spain and Hugo Pinell, were liable for all five. He did not mention the sixth defendant, Fleeta Drumgo, during this part of his argument.

Mr. Herman said some testimony by the prosecution had gone uncontroverted by the defense. For example, he said no defense witness had contradicted the assertion of a guard, Charles Breckenridge, that Mr. Johnson tried to strangle him.

Mistrial Motion Made

Frank Cox, Mr. Johnson's lawyer, moved for a mistrial at this point saying Mr. Herman's statement conflicted with a Supreme Court decision that said a defendant's failure to take the witness stand in his own behalf could not be commented on by a prosecutor because it would constitute a violation of his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

Mr. Johnson did not take the stand during the trial. Judge Broderick denied the motion. Mr. Herman said two letters in Mr. Jackson's handwriting, one found in January 1971 and the other a week after the incident at the prison, showed that Mr. Jackson was "planning and conspiring to escape."

Mr. Herman's closing argument continues tomorrow.

Three Arrested in Slaying NIAGARA FALLS, June 21 (AP)—Three men were arrested early today and charged with murder in the shooting of a taxi driver, Andrew Coffie, 59 years old, whose body was found outside his apartment Saturday.

The three were identified as Willie D. Johnson, 27; Sylvester Scott, 27, and Samuel Baslip, 20, all of Niagara Falls. Police Lieut. John Zaccarella said that Mr. Coffie was believed to have won money gambling and that "somebody tried to take it from him."

Bingham has been a fugitive ever since.

It was brought out, however, in cross-examination of a guard earlier in the trial that the gun was too large to have fit into the tape recorder. Mr. Bingham allegedly used to hide it in.

Full Liability Alleged

The prosecutor said that the death of the guards and the inmate trustees was a "natural and probable consequence" of the escape attempt and that all the defendants were liable for the deaths because of their actions at the prison that day.

Mr. Herman also said the defendants were liable as conspirators, even if they did not know "one of the original conspirators," Stephen M. Bingham. The prosecution has contended that Mr. Bingham, a lawyer, smuggled a gun to Mr. Jackson in a tape recorder, setting off the escape attempt. Mr.

Suspect Is Linked to Death of Reporter

PHOENIX, June 21—A police detective testified today that two witnesses said that Don Bolles, a reporter for The Arizona Republic, shouted the name "John Adamson" moments after a bomb ripped his car apart and fatally injured him on June 2.

Subsequently, a former girlfriend of Mr. Adamson testified that he had boasted of expecting to come into a great deal of money shortly before the attack on Mr. Bolles, that he had asked her to search for the reporter on two occasions and that she had accompanied him on a trip where he bought a "radio control device" and discussed explosives with her.

Mr. Adamson, a 32-year-old greyhound racing dog owner and tow truck operator, went into court today to face murder charges resulting from Mr. Bolles's death.

The proceeding was a preliminary hearing to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to bring Mr. Adamson to a formal trial on homicide charges.

As Mr. Adamson was called to answer the charges, police detectives continued to say privately that they expected further arrests in the case, and that they would involve persons prominent and influential in Arizona politics.

A special state prosecutor introduced today what newsmen here had been calling a "surprise witness": Gail Owens, a 30-year-old woman who said that she had been having an affair with Mr. Adamson since last March.

She testified that, late in April, she went to San Diego with him and that he purchased a radio control device at a hobby shop, saying it was intended as a gift for a brother. The police maintain that the device was used to detonate the bomb, although it is normally used to control model airplanes.

Mrs. Owens, a divorcee, also testified that, about 10 days before the attack on Mr. Bolles, Mr. Adamson "said he had a job coming up where he was going to make lots of money, and if that went well, he'd have two more."

Mrs. Owens said that on June 2, the day of the bombing, Mr. Adamson called her. "He said some things had happened, and I won't see you for a while," she said.

She testified that she was with Mr. Adamson in San Diego when he talked by telephone to an assistant of Neal Roberts, a Phoenix lawyer, and that she had also been present when Mr. Roberts and Mr. Adamson had discussed explosives.

William Schafer 3d, an assistant State Attorney General, has been appointed as a special prosecutor in the case, largely because of concern over criticism of the county prosecutor's office. Some Phoenix police officers have alleged that the prosecutor's office refused to press some land-fraud cases because of pressure from influential people in Arizona.

Mr. Adamson is accused of luring Mr. Bolles to a meeting at a downtown hotel here on the pretense of giving him information indicating that several political leaders were in-

involved in a fraudulent land deal.

Mr. Schafer and his chief deputy, Eugene Neil, have not disclosed what theory, if any, they have on the motive for the murder of Mr. Bolles, a 47-year-old reporter who had written extensively on land frauds and involvement of criminal elements in business.

At today's hearing before Justice of the Peace Marion Reno, who turned down a defense proposal to close the proceedings to news organizations, George Klettlinger, a Phoenix detective testified that he arrived at the hotel moments after the explosion. He also testified that Leland Reed, a construction worker, and Max Klass, a former mayor of a Phoenix suburb, said that Mr. Bolles mentioned Mr. Adamson as he lay injured after the blast.

"John Adamson did it, Mr. Klettlinger quoted Mr. Klass as saying. The detective added that Mr. Reed also said Mr. Bolles mentioned Mr. Adamson's name, and used the word "Mafia."

Mr. Klettlinger also testified that Mr. Klass said he had discovered a white sheet and white work pants abandoned near his office, which is across the street from the explosion scene shortly after blast occurred.

HOUSE VOTES 8% RISE IN AID FOR VETERANS

WASHINGTON, June 21 (UPI)—The House of Representatives voted today to give 2.5 million American war veterans, survivors and dependents an 8 percent increase in disability compensations and pensions.

One bill, approved by a vote of 351 to 0, would provide an 8 percent cost-of-living increase in compensations rates covering veterans and the widows and dependent children of veterans who died of service-connected causes.

Another bill, approved 354 to 0, would make permanent an interim 8 percent increase in non-service-connected pension payments passed earlier. It would provide additional 7 percent increase effective next Jan. 1.

The combined estimated cost of the bills, which were sent to the Senate, was $307 million for the next fiscal year.

More than 2.2 million veterans of wars as far back as World War I are covered by the disability compensations.

Why wait up to 90 days to earn 5 1/4% interest

In 90 days, County Federal can pay you 5 3/4%!

County Federal Savings and Loan pays interest on your savings every month — on all accounts, passbook or savings certificate. So you never have to wait up to 90 days to enjoy the interest you've earned.

If you now have a passbook account that requires you to wait till the end of a quarter, County Federal suggests you consider the advantages of a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. You can earn 5 3/4% interest on your savings instead of the 5 1/4% (or perhaps 5%) you now receive. You don't have to tie your money up for a long period of time, because your funds are available to you without any interest penalty every 90 days. (Renewal of your certificate can be made automatic, subject to your approval.)

With a County Federal 90-day Certificate, your savings not only earn a higher rate but your interest is compounded daily. And you can draw your interest every month — or leave it in your account to earn more interest. If your savings and interest remain in your account a full year, your effective annual yield is actually 6%!

Increase the interest you now get every quarter with a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. Minimum deposit — $500.

NOTE: Government regulations require a substantial interest penalty for early withdrawal from Time Savings Accounts. Interest on the amount withdrawn may not exceed the passbook rate, and interest for 90 days is forfeited.

A Canal Project in South Caps 200-Year Dream

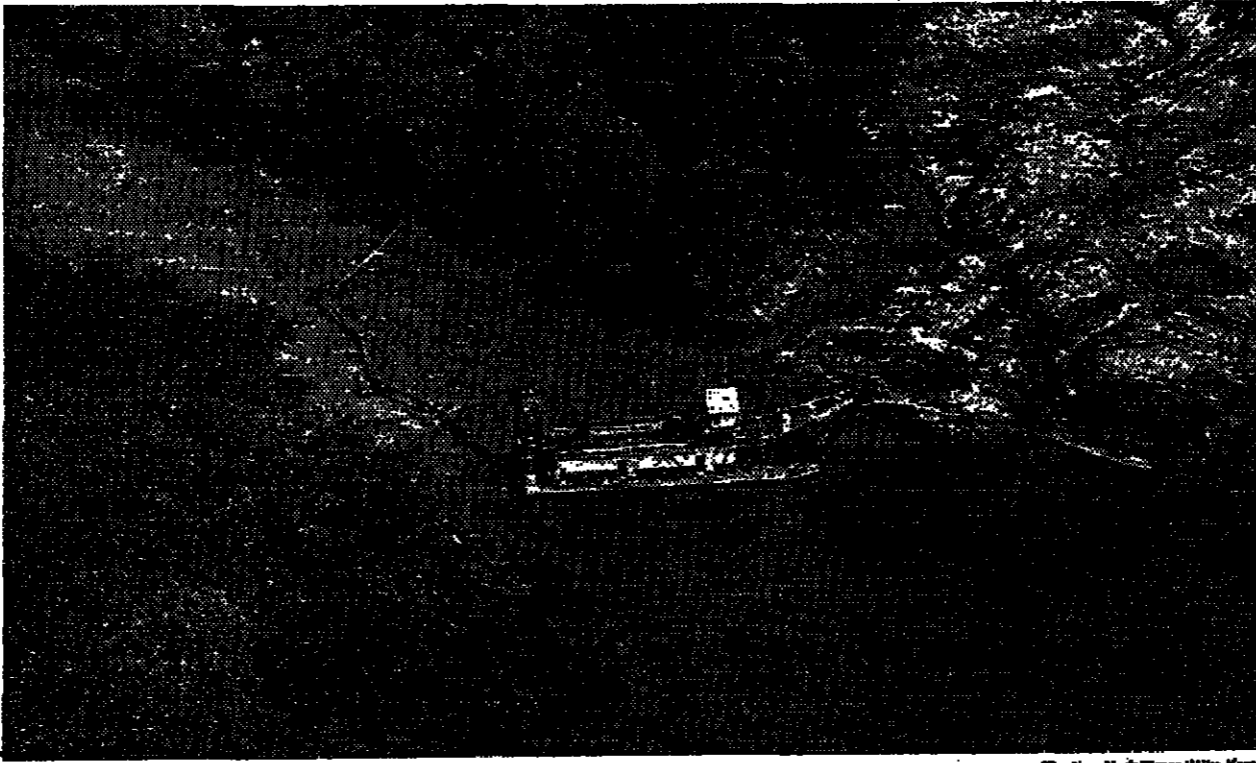

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.
Special to The New York Times

COLUMBUS, Miss., June 17—For more than two centuries entrepreneurs and engineers have dreamed of cutting a canal through this corner of Mississippi to link the Tennessee River to the north with the Tombigbee River to the south, as a passage from the Gulf port of Mobile to the cities and towns of the Tennessee Valley. Most of the dozen or so feasibility studies conducted since the 1700's have come out unfavorably. There has always been doubt that enough barge traffic would use the route to justify the cost of 200 miles of channel improvement and 50 miles of canals, locks and dams. But suddenly, little noticed by the world beyond, the dream of a Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway is moving rapidly from speculative fantasy to a $1.5 billion, federally financed fact that is a classic example of the many ways the Sunbelt—the southern half of the country—is winning the so-called "economic war" between the states and regions. Because of quiet dig-persistence by the United States Army Corps of Engineers, the agency responsible for inland navigation, and wily Southern seniority on the pork barrel committees of Congress (one-man, one-vote has not yet wiped out all pockets of stubborn Dixie tenure), one "Tenn-Tom" lock is already in place, another is half-finished and the bulldozers are about to begin cutting the canal. The Tenn-Tom is not the first time veteran Southern legislators and the public works and military bureaucracies in Washington have teamed up. But seldom has the alliance produced so large a Federal windfall. A few voices cry out now and again that Tenn-Tom is an environmental disaster whose cost has multiplied tenfold, and that it is as unfeasible today as it was back in the 1760's. That was when it was first proposed to Louis XV of France as a way to hasten settlement of North America.

is well-served by rail, highway and air. Similarly, the Tenn-Tom's opponents well remember that the millions spent making the Arkansas River navigable to Tulsa, Okla., have not yet been repaid in barge traffic and industrial development. There is also the Trinity River project, the $2 billion plan to open a waterway from the Gulf of Mexico to Dallas. In 1973, Dallas area residents voted not to participate in that plan, though their share of the cost would have been only 10 percent. That is not to say the plan is dead. Texas legislators and Army engineers still consider it feasible and are trying to get it approved a little bit at a time. Although studies show the Tenn-Tom to be unfeasible, others indicate that it would pay for itself. Congress and the Corps have put their faith in the latter. Whatever the case, the bulldozers continue to roar across northeastern Mississippi and parts of west-central Alabama, eating away at the 258 million cubic yards of dirt and rock that separate the Tennessee River from the Tombigbee. That is enough spoil to fill 37 million dump trucks.

Ervin Says A.F.L.-C.I.O. 'Unholy Alliance' With U

WASHINGTON, June 21—The National Communist Party, former Senator Sam J. Ervin, accused the A.F.L.-C.I.O. leadership today of forming "an unholy alliance" with the American Electric Power Company to prevent Congress from voting on a bill designating a 26.5-mile stretch of the New River as part of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System. "Whenever you get organized labor and big business together, the American people are liable to get it in the neck," he said at a news conference. The North Carolina Democrat, who headed the Senate Watergate investigation, retired two years ago. He returned to Washington today in company with North Carolina's Republican Governor, James E. Holshouser Jr., to urge the Senate majority leader, Mike Mansfield of Montana, to call the bill for floor action quickly. Mr. Ervin's lobbying was reinforced by a rally staged by or so for every tax dollar invested. "By the time construction started in the early 1970's, the cost was up to around half a billion, but the return was estimated at $1.60 for every $1 spent. Now the cost is put at $1.5 billion and is going up by about a third every year. And the return? About $1.10 for every $1 invested. Unbelievable." Much of the downstream freight on Tenn-Tom barges probably will be coal from lower Appalachia. This disturbs railroads, which generally charge three times as much as barges to move freight, in part because barge operators pay no fee for use of waterways. D. Leo Koester, an official of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, a major mid-South coal transporter, says the Tenn-Tom will do little more than "double-line and duplicate" the Mississippi River barge route.

What will it take to make jobs for your children?

We need to get unemployed people back onto business pay-rolls—and the sooner the better. Right now, America needs millions of jobs.

But there's also the challenge of a growing work force—young people reaching working age, and others entering the job market. Your children and ours. That work force will grow by at least 1 1/2 million every year from now through 1980.

What will it take to create new jobs for them?

Money. The huge sums of money (investment capital) companies need to upgrade and expand their facilities. It's those facilities that, when business picks up, maintain jobs and create new ones. How much money's needed? The average investment to create a single new job opportunity in manufacturing is around $25,000 today. It will be at least $35,000 in 1980.

That multiplies out to $37 1/2 billion in capital investment today to create 1 1/2 million new jobs. By 1980, it will take an investment of $52 1/2 billion.

Where will that money come from?

The key to getting the money we need for expansion and improvement of our plants is better earnings*—earnings that can be invested in our operations and that will encourage investors to provide us additional money. But this alone is not enough because under present Federal tax laws the government would take too much of any additional dollars we can earn. What we need now is Federal tax reform to help lower barriers to capital formation.

*In 1975, Bethlehem's earnings after taxes were only 4.8% of revenues.

How you can help gear up the American economy

The tax-writing committees of the U.S. Congress are studying the subject of "Capital Formation." Here are four tax measures which we believe the Congress should enact to encourage industrial expansion and to create jobs: (1) five-year capital recovery system, (2) 12% permanent investment tax credit, (3) write-off of the costs of pollution control facilities in the year they are incurred, (4) eliminate the double taxation of corporate profits paid out as dividends. If you agree that revisions in present Federal tax laws are needed to provide the additional capital for more and better jobs, we ask you to tell that to your Senators and Congressman. For a free copy of the folder, "Project MainSpring—with your help it can wind up the American economy again," write: Public Affairs Dept., Room 476-NY1, Bethlehem Steel Corp., Bethlehem, PA 18016.

J. Investigated Hong Kong Woman Friend of Nixon in '60's to Determine if She Was Foreign Agent

BY M. CREWSDON
 The New York Times
 JUNE 21—The Bureau of Investigation investigated a Hong Kong woman in the late 1960's to determine whether she was an intelligence agent.

closed, the F.B.I. agent in Hong Kong who had initially reported the friendship three years before sent a personal letter about the matter to Mr. Hoover. According to one Hoover aide, the director expressed surprise when he read the letter and asked how widely the allegation was known within the bureau.

The aide, who was also unweighed in Mr. Nixon's decision in the summer of 1971 to keep Mr. Hoover as director. Mr. Hoover died in office at the age of 77 on May 2, 1972. One F.B.I. official involved with the early stages of the two-year investigation, said the inquiry was "quite low-key" at the beginning, and that he thought it had been soon ended. He said that he was at a loss to explain who within the bureau had kept the case active until well after Mr. Nixon had entered the White House, or why he had done so. In a recent interview in the Los Angeles restaurant where she now works, Mrs. Liu, who became a naturalized American citizen last year, said that she first met Mr. Nixon when he was Vice President and she was a part-time tour guide for a Hong Kong travel agency.

Mrs. Liu, a 44-year-old mother of two children who no longer lives with her husband, said that she saw Mr. Nixon on several occasions after that in the mid-1960's, that he gave her perfume and flowers and that she once visited him in his suite in Hong Kong's Mandarin Hotel. But she said that she and Mr. Nixon had never been intimate.

White House travel records show that Mr. Nixon visited Hong Kong once each year between 1964 and 1967 in connection with his representation of clients of the Wall Street law firm of Nixon, Lodge, Rose, Guthrie, Alexander & Mitchell.

Mrs. Liu said that she believed she saw Mr. Nixon on his trips in 1964, 1965 and 1966, but that she was hospitalized when he arrived in Hong Kong on April 7, 1967, and that he sent flowers to her room, but did not pay her a visit.

One F.B.I. source said that he recalled having been told that Mr. Nixon had somehow intervened with Federal authorities in Mrs. Liu's behalf to seek her admission to the United States as a permanent resident alien. Asked whether she had received any such assistance, the woman, who entered this country permanently while Mr. Nixon was President-elect, said that she had not. But she declined to sign a release that would have made the content of her Immigration and Naturalization Service file available for inspection by The New York Times.

ing to numerous individuals in and government, the bureau did any evidence suggest that Mr. Nixon had an intimate relationship with her or that their relationship represented a threat to security.

O'Neill Said to Have Intervened in Case Of Rent Subsidies for Campaign Donor

By MARTIN TOLCHIN Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, June 21—Carla M. Hills, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, said today that the House majority leader, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., had called her last July in an effort to speed a decision on $2.2 million in Federal rent subsidies sought by a campaign contributor for an upstate New York housing project. "I simply called my people here and said, 'Let's get off the dime,'" Mrs. Hills said in response to an inquiry. She said that Mr. O'Neill, a Massachusetts Democrat, had sought to clear up "an environmental snag" involving Genesee Crossroads, a 21-story housing project in Rochester whose developer, James P. Wilmot, had contributed $1,000 to Mr. O'Neill's 1974 re-election campaign. Mr. Wilmot, a major contributor to Democratic candidates, is chairman of the Democratic Congressional Finance Committee. Mrs. Hills recalled that the thrust of Mr. O'Neill's request was that "time means money," and added that "when a developer or a Congressman said that he was caught in a bureaucratic malaise," she took immediate steps to remedy the problem. Another high H.U.D. official said that Mr. O'Neill's telephone call to Mrs. Hills was among several attempts by the Congressman to intercede on Mr. Wilmot's behalf. "This official emphasized that there was nothing illegal about Mr. O'Neill's reported intercession. He said that it was common for Congressmen to intervene on behalf of constituents and others who were having problems with the Federal bureaucracy. Nor was there a suggestion that Mr. Wilmot had received a quid pro quo for his campaign gifts but rather that such contributions encouraged the recipients to do what they could to aid the donors, within the limits of the law, when the need arose. Mr. O'Neill could not be reached for comment. Gary Hymel, his press secretary, said that he had relayed the inquiry to Mr. O'Neill, who he said had replied that "he had no contact with any H.U.D. people over Genesee Crossroads." Similarly, Mr. Wilmot could not be reached for comment in his Rochester office. Nevertheless, Bob Sant, an aide to Mr. Wilmot, said that Mr. O'Neill had not intervened. However, two housing officials in New York State said that they had been informed by the agency's headquarters here of Mr. O'Neill's interest. Both officials denied, however, that this had played any role in their decision last week to provide 100 percent rent subsidies to Genesee Crossroads, a project developed by Wilmotite Construction Inc., of which Mr. Wilmot is chairman. Told of interest "I was told he had an interest in it," said Frank Cerebone, director of the agency's Rochester office, when asked about Mr. O'Neill's involvement. "I heard it from H.U.D. in Washington, but he never contacted me directly." Similarly, S. William Green, the department's New York State regional director, said, "I've had to call from O'Neill," but added that agency officials in Washington had relayed Mr. O'Neill's concern. The rent subsidy is for an apartment house that was built with 95 percent financing from the New York Division of Housing and Community Renewal. The building was completed last September. About 300 families are living in the apartments, 198 of which remain unoccupied. The building has one-bedroom and two-bedroom apartments, which rent for $98 a room. Under the rent subsidy program, tenants pay 25 percent of their income for rent and the Federal Government provides the remainder. Mr. Wilmot has contributed to local as well as Congressional campaigns. He gave $5,000 to Mayor Beame's campaign in 1973. He was named by Governor Carey to a six-member executive finance committee to repay Mr. Carey's $2.3 million campaign debt from 1974. 2 Young Brothers Drown MARLTON, N.J., June 21 (AP)—Two young brothers drowned in a Burlington County lake yesterday, the authorities said. James Clause, 6 years old, and John Clause, 4, of Maple Shade, were pronounced dead at Garden State Community Hospital. They had accompanied their mother on a visit to relatives near the King's Grant section here, according to the authorities. SUMMER IS FOR KIDS HELP THE FRESH AIR FUND

Hays's Resignation Of Chairmanship Accepted by House

Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, June 21—The House accepted today the resignation of Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, as chairman of the House Administration Committee. Speaker Carl Albert of Oklahoma, who had made public Mr. Hays's intention last Friday, laid the letter before the House, and it was accepted without objection. Mr. Albert said that the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee, the majority party's 22-member policy-setting group, would meet tomorrow to approve more than a dozen proposals to revise the bookkeeping and housekeeping affairs of the chamber. The proposals include consolidating all the expenses, travel and perquisites of an individual member into one central account, monthly rather than semiannual reports of payrolls and expenses and taking from the House Administration Committee and restoring to the full House the power to increase the expense allowances of members. In 1971, the House voted to vest this power in Mr. Hays, study by the Library of Congress estimated that removal of controls would cost consumers $2.4 billion to $3.6 billion by the spring of 1979, when price controls on all petroleum products are due to expire. Harrington, Democrat of Massachusetts, will request the ouster of Mr. Hays as chairman of the panel's Subcommittee on International Operations. PRICE RISE FORECAST ON HOME HEATING OIL

WASHINGTON, June 21 (AP)—The price of home heating oil will rise by 4 cents a gallon over the next 30 months, with or without Federal price controls, Congress was told today. But the Federal Energy Administration said it saw no basis for fears that prices would rise sharply if controls were ended. John A. Hill, the agency's deputy administrator, detailed the Ford Administration's position for ending controls at a hearing before the Senate Interior Committee. Unless either the House or Senate disapproves, controls on heating oil, diesel and other so-called middle distillates will end on June 30. The agency's predictions on prices were disputed by several witnesses. James L. Feldesman, representing the Consumer Federation of America, noted that a study by the Library of Congress estimated that removal of controls would cost consumers $2.4 billion to $3.6 billion by the spring of 1979, when price controls on all petroleum products are due to expire.

's Find Swine Flu Vaccines Satisfactory for Majority of Adults but Less Acceptable for Children

M. SCHMECK Jr. of the New York Times, according to the New York Times, June 21—The reports against swine-flu vaccines have been no danger to the majority of adults according to data from nationwide studies against the swine-type influenza virus, according to the reports.

Experts emphasized that there have been no dangerous reactions to the vaccine, although there have been some cases of fever, headache, muscle aches and similar problems among the children. Furthermore, the vaccine types that seemed to offer the best protection against the flu also were found the most likely to produce side effects in the children.

More than 5,000 people from 20 to 100 years old have received vaccine in tests that began April 21 for the nationwide program is the largest and most intensive immunization effort ever attempted in the United States.

The program was announced by President Ford late in March.

Lack of Immunity Feared

The virus was discovered in an outbreak at Fort Dix, N.J., last February that spread to several hundred people on a military base. Public-health experts recommended a nationwide vaccination campaign because they believed most Americans had no natural immunity to the swine-flu type of virus.

An added concern was that the virus appeared similar to the one that caused the greatest worldwide outbreak of flu in modern history, the pandemic of 1918.

Since the discovery of the outbreak at Fort Dix, four vaccine manufacturers have been developing and producing vaccine against the virus. Results of the first tests of these vaccines in humans were described today at a meeting at the National Institutes of Health sponsored by the Public Health Service.

Although the vaccines of all four manufacturers are for use against the same flu virus, manufacturing techniques and vaccine characteristics differ.

Some Split the Virus

Two manufacturers, Merck, Sharp and Dohme, and Merrell National Laboratories, produced their vaccine in a way that leaves the virus particles intact. The other manufacturers, Weth Laboratories and Parke Davis & Co., used chemical methods to disrupt the virus, producing what specialists call "split virus" vaccines.

The reports showed that in general the whole-virus vaccine gave higher levels of protective antibodies but also produced more frequent side effects such as fever, headaches and soreness.

In adults over age 23, the split-virus vaccines seem to work about as well as the others, according to Dr. Paul D. Parkman of the Food and Drug Administration's bureau of biologics.

Indeed, he and others said the effectiveness seemed to be age-related, with the older groups more readily developing protective levels of antibodies.

They indicated that this might be a result of prior exposure to different types of flu virus.

The younger adults, and children, seemed to respond less favorably in that respect.

Dr. David T. Karzon of Vanderbilt University said it might be possible that children would be better protected with two doses of vaccine given several weeks apart.

He said the studies involving children had involved fewer persons and were not as far advanced as those with adults. He also said the studies were continuing. Of the 5,200 people who have taken part in the tests, only 1,000 have been children.

At a news conference between morning and afternoon sessions of the meeting, Dr. Karzon said the antibody response of children to a single dose of split-virus vaccine was not acceptable.

The results obtained with the new vaccines were reported to be as good as or better than any obtained in the past with flu vaccines.

The Government's plan at present is to start giving vaccine to people in high-risk groups late this summer.

VOTERS' APPROVAL IN ZONING UPHELD

Supreme Court, 6-3, Rules Cities May Require Final Decision by Referendum

WASHINGTON, June 21—The Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 today that it is constitutional for a city to require property owners who want their land rezoned to first get the approval of the city's voters in a referendum.

The decision, written by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, could ultimately affect growth patterns in cities and suburbs across the country.

It comes at a time when many communities are trying to limit or control growth—and when some of the zoning techniques devised by communities are under attack in the courts, sometimes by builders and sometimes by groups who contend that the new techniques are designed to exclude them.

The Court's ruling, involving a referendum provision adopted in 1971 by the voters of the city of Eastlake, Ohio, appears limited to localities in states where there is a provision—as in Ohio's State Constitution—reserving the referendum power for the voters on local or municipal matters.

However, there are now about 29 states that have some type of provision for referendums on local legislation or local ordinances, according to Michael S. Mandel of the National Association of Home Builders, one of the groups that opposed the Eastlake referendum provision before the high court. Presumably, other states could adopt such provisions as well.

Openings for Localities
Referendum zoning is not yet widespread. But in states where there are these provisions allowing a referendum system, the Court's decision opens the way for localities to adopt referendum systems like Eastlake's.

The Supreme Court has already expressed approval of the referendum concept in another context by sustaining in 1971 a California procedure providing that no low-rent public housing project be developed, constructed or acquired by a state agency without the approval of a majority of those voting in a community election.

Today, all nine Justices expressed approval of using the referendum procedure in zoning cases as well, at least to some extent. The dispute was over the type of zoning change that should be submitted to popular vote—just broad questions involving the overall community zoning plan, for instance, or all zoning changes including even single parcels of land where the zoning change

Summary of Actions Taken by the United States Supreme Court

CRIMINAL
At the behest of South Carolina's Attorney General, the Court agreed to decide whether the presence of an undercover agent during conversations between a defendant and the defendant's lawyer is automatically a violation of the defendant's constitutional right to counsel.

MILITARY
The Court turned down a request by a former Air Force colonel, Gerald V. Kehrl, to review his court-martial conviction in February 1971 on several marijuana counts involving alleged use and possession of marijuana while in Vietnam. The colonel served 16 months in confinement and paid a $15,000 fine for the offenses. The American Civil Liberties Union, representing Mr. Kehrl, had asked the high court to review the case in part to consider the scope of Federal habeas corpus review of court-martial convictions. (Kehrl v. Sprinkle, No. 75-1170).

RELIGION
By a 5-4 vote, the Court upheld a Maryland statute that authorizes nonsectarian grants to church-related colleges—including colleges where theology and religion are mandatory courses—but that prohibits the use of the money for sectarian purposes. Justices Brennan, Marshall, Stewart and Stevens dissented. (Rosen v. Maryland Public Works Bd., No. 75-730.)

OBSCENITY
The Court agreed to take a further look at what "community standards" should be applied in deciding whether material is obscene—particularly when there may be a conflict between state and Federal law. In the case that the Court accepted for review—Smith v. U.S., No. 75-1439—the defendant was convicted in a Federal court in Iowa of seven counts of mailing obscene material in violation of Federal law. Iowa law forbids distribution of obscene material only to minors, not to adults.

POLICE
Without having heard arguments on the matter and without issuing an opinion, the Court affirmed a lower Federal court upholding a Missouri law that excludes policemen from the state's provisions for public employee collective bargaining. Justices William J. Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall, and Powell said they would have heard arguments on the case, rather than decide it summarily. (Vorbeck v. McNeal, No. 75-1550).

ZONING
The Court ruled the city's requirement that rezoned land zoning be approved by 50% of the voters in a referendum does not violate the equal rights of a owner who is trying his land rezoned. Powell, Stevens and dissented. (Eastlake City Enterprises Inc 1963).

SCHOOL AID
The Court ruled that a Federal law that requires states to provide a certain level of education to all children does not require states to provide a certain level of education to all children.

FREE SPEECH
The court also agreed to review—at the request of New Hampshire's Attorney General—a lower Federal court decision that held unconstitutional a state statute prohibiting motorists from obscuring the motto "Live Free or Die" on license plates. The lower court found the statute infringed the constitutional free speech right. (Woolley v. Maynard, No. 75-1453).

JUDGES
Without comment, the Justices turned down the request of judges of the United States Court of Claims for a ruling on whether the Court of Claims judges may rule on the lawsuits in which 82 Federal judges are seeking a pay rise. The Court of Claims judges had asked the high court, in effect, to decide whether they should disqualify themselves from hearing the cases because, as would not threaten the community zoning plan.

The Eastlake provision—an amendment to the city charter—covers all zoning changes, with the exception, as interpreted by the Ohio courts, of variances granted because of "hardship."

Under the provision, someone who wants a zoning variance applies to the city planning commission, which, if it approves, recommends the change to the city council. If the council approves, the change is put to referendum, where it must be approved by a 55 percent vote.

The case began when a landowner—Forest City Enterprises Inc.—sought a zoning change to allow building of a high-rise apartment building. The landowner filed a suit to have the provision struck down as an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power; the proposed change, meanwhile, was not approved at the referendum.

The Ohio Supreme Court found that the provision was an unconstitutional delegation of power, as alleged. It said that the requirement, lacking standards to guide the voters, permitted the police power to be used in a standardless, arbitrary and capricious manner.

The Supreme Court, reversing the Ohio court, reasoned that a referendum could not be considered a delegation of power, saying: "Under our constitutional assumptions, all power derives from the people, who can delegate it to representative instruments which they create. In establishing legislative bodies, the people can reserve to themselves power to deal directly with matters which might otherwise be assigned to the legislature."

Justice John Paul Stevens wrote the main dissent, joined by William J. Brennan Jr., Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. wrote a separate one-paragraph dissent. The dissenters stressed the broad scope of the Eastlake provision and the difficulties it posed for the sole landowner.

COURT EASES WAY TO AID COLLEGES

A three-judge court in Manhattan yesterday that it was unconstitutional for New York to reimburse religious or the costs of state testing and record-keeping and other effect of advancing religious education.

The unanimous opinion, written by Judge Ward, cited a Supreme Court decision that struck down two Pennsylvania laws that had provided auxiliary services and instructional material and equipment to nonpublic schools, 75 percent of them sectarian.

"The court found that while the materials themselves may be secular and non-ideological, the aid thereby provided had the primary and direct effect of advancing the religious mission of the sectarian beneficiaries," Judge Ward declared.

Government currently provides funding to colleges and universities, and the effect of today's decision is to subject to council verification.

Initially, 17 institutions received funding, five of them church-related. Currently, apparently, only three church-affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church. The lawsuit, brought by four Maryland citizens, represented by the American Civil Liberties Union, against the colleges and state officials involved these three and a fourth Roman fare operates several programs that are similar in some ways to the Maryland program. The most significant is the "strengthening developing institutions program," under which more than $110 million was appropriated in the 1975 fiscal year. Grants were made to 207 institutions, with a "significant number," according to the brief, to church-related institutions.

This afternoon, the president of Holy Cross College in Massachusetts, the Rev. John E. Brooks, issued a statement saying that he was "gratified" by the ruling, and adding, "I hope that such funding will become a more general practice by the state given the dire economic challenges facing private higher education."

Mandatory religion or theology courses are taught at each, primarily by Roman Catholic clerics, according to the Federal District Court, which also upheld the program. Some classes began with prayer, the number varying with the college, according to the district court.

Previously, the cases in which the high court approved governmental aid to higher education institutions involved money for construction purposes.

programs, which vary. Further, the decision today was based on an analysis of all the provisions of the Maryland program and the extent of governmental ties the program entails.

The five-man majority split two ways on the reasoning, with Justice Harry A. Blackmun writing for three, and Byron R. White writing for two. As a result, there was no majority opinion.

However, the decision is likely to be widely viewed as at least supportive of these other state and Federal programs.

considered cases of governmental aid to schools numerous times.

Under the test, the aid must have a secular purpose, its primary effect must not be the advancement of religion and it must not "excessively" entangle the state in church affairs.

Justice Blackmun found that the Maryland aid program passed all three parts of the test. He accepted the lower court's finding that the church-related colleges involved in the case—which were sued along with state officials by four Maryland citizens—are not "pervasively sectarian."

Justice White contended for the two other majority judges that the Court need only ask about the first two parts of the three-part test, and not the third, "entanglement" issue. He found that the Maryland plan met both of those parts.

Board Reaffirms San Francisco Workers' Pay Cut

By LES LEDBETTER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, June 21—Pay cuts of up to 25 percent for 1,800 blue-collar city workers effective July 1 were reaffirmed today by the city's Board of Supervisors.

The board refused to amend their March 30 salary ordinance, which ordered the pay cuts and provoked the craft workers to strike for 33 days. The action was expected in light of a statement by a supervisors' subcommittee that "no facts of sufficient substance" had been introduced to cause the board to reconsider its original vote. The action was the second blow of the day to the once powerful municipal union.

Earlier in the day, Judge Clayton Horn of Superior Court found four union leaders and five of the labor organizations in injunction against the strike. The injunction against the strike was issued at its outset.

Judge Horn fined the Laborers International Local 261, the San Francisco Building Trades Council, the Pipefitters Local 38, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 6 and the San Francisco Labor Council $4,000 each.

Sentenced to five days in jail and a $500 fine each, the maximum allowable, were George Evankovich of the Laborers, Joseph Mazzola of the Plumbers Local 38, Franz Glen of the Electrical Workers and Joseph O'Sullivan of the Building Trades Council.

None of those concerned would comment officially on the court action this morning or the supervisors' action this afternoon, but one union official indicated that the sentences would be appealed and that consideration would also be given to challenging the board's action in court.

Unofficially, union leaders are pessimistic about their chances of stopping the wage cuts since the first strike was largely ignored by other unions and city workers and did not seem to damage the city's commercial or public life critically. The major effect was a shutdown of the city transit system, when union drivers refused to cross picket lines, and the shutdown of certain gardening and garbage operations. The city seemed able to cope with these drawbacks.

The actions today were in a sense anticlimatic. The strike ended on May 8 when the union leaders agreed that five of their number would join with five supervisors and Mayor George Moscone on a fact-finding committee to determine whether the supervisors acted properly and with full knowledge of their actions when they voted to cut the income of 10 percent of the craft workers while granting small to moderate raises to 16,000 other city workers, mostly clerical and other white-collar workers.

The supervisors said they and still maintain that city voters "mandated" these pay cuts last November when they repealed a part of the City Charter that required that craft workers be paid the prevailing wage paid for like work in private industry.

The unions say the voters repealed only the pay parity formula and did not authorize any salary cuts.

Nevertheless, after a month of proposals and counterproposals that led nowhere, Mayor George Christopher suggested a back-to-work settlement that included a fact-finding committee that would report to the full Board of Supervisors before the cuts went into effect July 1.

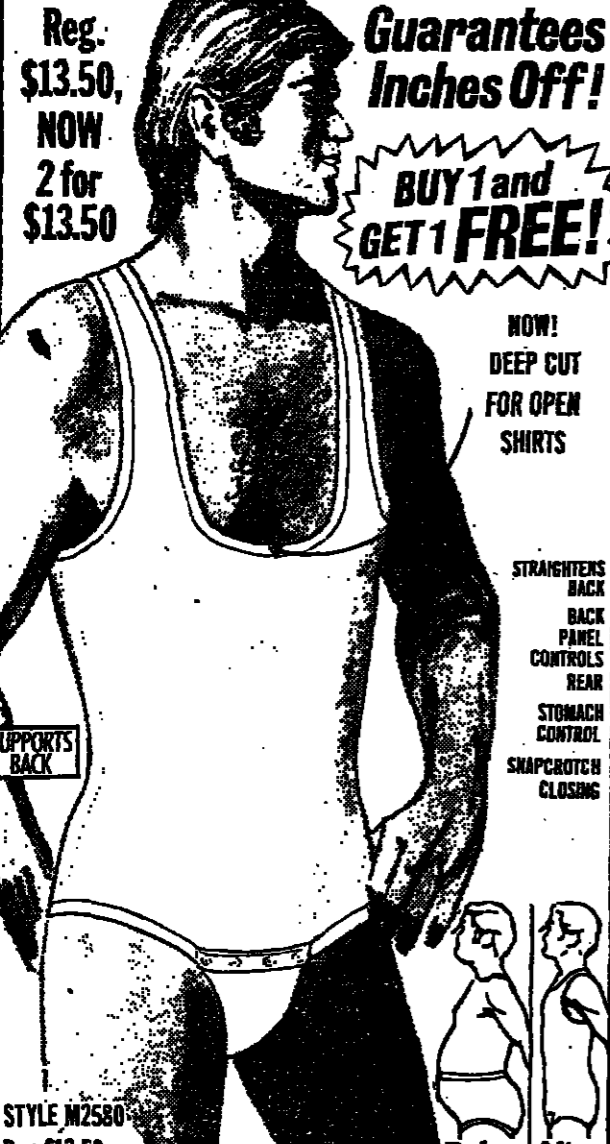

That committee met more than 39 hours and got more than 3,000 pages of documentation from the union lawyers and negotiators seeking to substantiate claims that their workers were not receiving more than they should and could not sustain the scheduled wage cuts.

However, the five supervisors on the committee remained unconvinced and last Thursday recommended that only clerical changes be made in the salary ordinance to include pay for hazardous duty.

Thousands of Public Employees Go on Strike in Massachusetts into court seeking to halt the strike and by noon, Judge Thomas B. Morse Jr. of Suffolk Superior Court issued a temporary restraining order.

But, as the afternoon wore on, the strikers continued to picket outside state office buildings and the gold-domed Capitol near the courthouse. Periodically, the pickets paused to shriek, "scab! Scab!" at people entering the building.

Judge Morse ordered the two sides to resume negotiations and report on their progress at 4 o'clock this afternoon. But the afternoon was spent in an inconclusive attempt to choose a mediator.

Governor Dukakis, who previously warned that he would discipline strikers, said at a news conference that "if the court order is not honored, we will return to court to seek contempt citations."

"If union leaders are serious about reaching agreement on a contract," the governor added, "they know that there is only one place where this can happen—and that is at the bargaining table."

The immediate impact of the strike appeared relatively limited, but officials warned that the situation could grow more serious if workers continued to stay off the job.

Several highways were shut out of open lanes, and the roadways were blocked by picketing workers.

beaches were closed because of a lack of lifeguards. State office buildings throughout Massachusetts were picketed, although most welfare centers were reported to be open.

Enough workers stayed on the job to prevent a feared dumping of sewage into Boston Harbor. The state police were moved into the prisons. Hospitals were functioning, but sometimes with skeleton staffs.

The state employees are bitter because they have not had a general wage increase since 1968. They received a cost-of-living increase two years ago, but the union contends that this did not keep salaries in pace with those in private industry or other nearby states.

The bitterness of the public employees has been heightened because in next year's budget, now being debated in the lower house, the legislators are planning to vote themselves substantial raises.

Governor Dukakis said in a statewide television address last night that "there is no question that our state employees deserve a pay raise," but he contended that the state could not afford it.

Asserting that the state "must have a balanced budget," the governor added that it must have no new taxes. Last year, Mr. Dukakis lost popularity by renegeing on a campaign promise not to raise taxes. Today, his aides believed that he had a political advantage by resisting the employees' pay demands.

Ford's Busing Stance: Little Change Discerned From His Voting Record and Long-Held Convictions

By SHARON COVENE

June 21—Mr. Ford has made a number of recent statements on busing. He asked the Attorney General to find a suitable busing case that the Supreme Court could reconsider. He said he believed that private schools should be able to accept or reject students as they saw fit without government interference. He also appeared to say recently that he would seek a review of the Supreme Court's 1954 Brown v. Board of Education decision, which held that separate but equal doctrine, under which many schools were segregated, was unconstitutional. The White House later said that the President had made a mistake when he mentioned the Brown case, and was not seeking to modify that decision.

White House aides have reiterated that Mr. Ford is not opposed to all school busing, but only "excessive" busing. The President has said that he is firmly opposed to racial segregation and will enforce the laws of the land. But there is no question—even his aides concede it—that Mr. Ford is seeking to reduce Federal activism in desegregating the public schools. Philip W. Buchen, the President's chief counsel, told an interviewer that Mr. Ford "realistically" believes that busing is causing more problems than it solves. Beyond that, the President does not think it should be government's role to insure racial "balancing" of the public schools. Mr. Buchen said. While there is a law that requires equal opportunity in employment, with implications of racial balancing, there is no such law for education and Mr. Ford does not believe there should be one. A "Good Atmosphere" The President believes that if blacks can live in a "good atmosphere," they do not necessarily want to live where they choose, Mr. Buchen said. It is Mr. Ford's opinion that in many cases the remedies prescribed by the courts were broader than the evidence of illegal discrimination, Mr. Buchen continued, although the White House has been unable to cite a single specific case. The President also thinks that the question of "quality education" has been ignored by the courts and that the money spent on busing could be better used in improving the quality of schools for the "disadvantaged," the White House counsel said. Mr. Buchen insisted that "quality education" was not a code for "separate but equal." There is some doubt that Mr. Ford's legislation to limit busing would be enacted by Congress. Because this is an election year and there is a possibility that the President could fail to be nominated by his own party, the prospects for such legislation are even poorer. But civil rights leaders and other critics have said that Mr. Ford, just by raising the busing issue, has increased the likelihood that civil rights laws will be defied, and that efforts to integrate schools will produce even more violence than they have previously. They also contend that the President is moving the Federal Government from the vanguard of the fight for racial justice and equity to the ranks of those resisting progress for blacks in the United States. A Look at the Record Mr. Ford's record on civil rights does not appear to support charges that he is an enemy of racial justice. His record as a member of Congress shows that he voted for most of the major civil rights legislation since World War II. But a close examination of his legislative record also dis-closes a certain ambiguity on civil rights issues. While he did end up voting for the major civil rights bills, he very often sponsored or voted for weaker, watered-down bills before doing so. And he consistently supported antibusing legislation. Mr. Ford's position was apparently shaped by his conviction that government impingement on individual choice should be held to a minimum, even if the goals of government action are desirable. A group of civil rights leaders who recently called at the White House said after meeting with the President that they did not question the sincerity of his beliefs. But they warned that raising the issue now could create nothing but mischief.

Some critics of Mr. Ford stand on busing said they were at a loss to understand why he had raised the issue at this time if not for political considerations. They noted that he is in a close and bitter campaign for his party's nomination at the end of a term as President for which he has no electoral mandate. They suggested that it was hardly a propitious moment to raise a basic and controversial issue if he should be held to a minimum, even if the goals of government action are desirable. A group of civil rights leaders who recently called at the White House said after meeting with the President that they did not question the sincerity of his beliefs. But they warned that raising the issue now could create nothing but mischief.

But Mr. Ford has not let the absence of a mandate restrain him from seeking basic changes in other crucial areas in the 22 months that he has been President. And he says he is confident that he will be elected this November to a full four-year term.

Senate voted on

lion, with $370 million scheduled for aid to education.
Meanwhile, the Senate approved by 35 to 0 a $2.85 billion budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1. The measure appropriates more $785 million in state aid for public schools and related activities, about two-thirds of the total required to meet the terms of the Public School Education Act of 1975. The Assembly will vote Wednesday.
Under the Senate measure the state's universities and colleges get $296 million—some $35 million more than had been recommended by Governor Byrne but $5 million less than the current appropriation.

The extra money needed to keep the colleges and universities operating at the current levels will come from higher tuition and fees to be charged starting next fall.
In general, the Legislature restored most of the major cuts that the Governor had recommended in his $3.76 billion budget in February.
Many of the cuts that the Governor had recommended were rejected after a recalculation of the amount of money that current taxes would bring in during the fiscal year beginning a week from Wednesday.
The new anticipated income is more than $100 million higher than it was in February.

The Assembly rejected the income-tax measure in the face of the Supreme Court's June 30 deadline for affirmative action by the Legislature to find $378 million in additional money to finance the Education Act of 1975. If the funds are not forthcoming, the court has ruled that no public money may be spent for educational purposes by any of the local school boards in the state.
If the conference committee cannot get agreement on a compromise bill that would be acceptable to both houses, the court order would, in effect, mandate the closing of the schools.

June Gable, in Cabaret Debut, Puts Act Together With Skill

June Gable, who has sung Jacques Brel's songs in the long-running "Alive and Well" show and played the "easy" assimilated old lady with one buttock in "Candide" and the Hispanic-accented Google Gomez in "The Ritz," is doing all that and a bit more in her cabaret debut at Brothers and Sisters, 355 West 46th Street.

She stirs everything together in a way that provides a constant succession of surprises, as though there were no end to the fascinating things she can do or the unexpected songs that she knows. One or two songs are expected: Brel's "Carrousel," for instance, but even this is used more as a signature than as the crutch it might have been. Miss Gable has no need of crutches of this type. She is completely self-propelled whether she is singing, talking or even jumping around the tiny stage at Brothers and Sisters.

Jazz Trumpeters Play a Memorial To Four Colleagues

Jazz trumpet players took part in "A Tribute to Courage" at CAMI Hall over the weekend. The two concerts were devoted to the memories of four dead trumpet artists, Fats Navarro, Clifford Brown, Kenny Dorham and Lee Morgan, and most of the musicians involved planned their sets accordingly, mixing original compositions with tunes written by or in tribute to the four men being honored.

bright, brassy sound to its performances of modern jazz staples from the 1940's. Cecil Bridgewater's quintet followed with a thoughtful set that included several lovely, seldom-played compositions by Lee Morgan and Kenny Dorham and two originals by the group's tenor saxophonist, John Stubbsfield. The originals were every bit as intriguing as the other pieces, and as a soloist Mr. Stubbsfield very nearly stole the evening with his pure-toned, heartfelt ballad playing.

U. Tuition Decision 'Irrageous,' Javits Says

By MARY BREASTED
 Gov. K. Javits yesterday said the establishment of the City University of New York's tuition increase is "irragous," a word he said he had never used before.

The appeal for funds was followed by a panel discussion between television personalities—Barbara Walters, John Chancellor and Bill Moyers—and Theodore H. White, the writer.

The discussion was supposed to be devoted to the question: "What does the rest of the country think of New York City?" Instead, the panel spent most of its time speculating on what a Jimmy Carter Presidency would be like.

When the panelists were discussing what they thought Mr. Carter's policy would be toward New York City, Mr. Moyers, a press secretary for former President Lyndon B. Johnson, said, "He'll certainly pray for it."

Beams Is Hopeful

Mayor Beame stood up to repeat the main points of his discussions with Mr. Carter on the federalization of welfare and Medicaid programs and said that he was hopeful a Carter Presidency would provide great financial relief for New York City through these and other policies.

Mr. White predicted that Mr. Carter would beat President Ford by "5 to 10 points."

Briefly, the panelists were asked about what the press, radio and television could do for New York. Mr. Chancellor's opinion when he said, "It's not up to us to be advocates for New York. It seems to me, it's just provoked."

Cuts at City U. Assigned; Large Closing Seen in Year

By JUDITH CUMMINGS
 The City University of New York will cut $48 million from its spending at 488 Lexington Avenue, near 45th Street.

A university spokesman, Daniel Brennan said that percentages had been assigned to the colleges selectively, according to the nature of their programs and students. The cost of education per student is higher in programs such as engineering, for example, and in the natural sciences. In effect, however, the assignments work out to an "almost per capita" formula, he said.

He added that decisions on the specific areas for the reductions would be "90 percent" within the college president's control.

Veto Power on Closing

The legislation authorizing the $470 million budget also gave the Legislature, for the first time, veto power over any proposals to close colleges.

Irwin Landes, the Nassau man of the Assembly Higher Education Committee and a principal sponsor of the legislation, emphasized yesterday that a unit could be closed only with the specific approval of each house of the Legislature. This constitutes a hurdle that many in Albany judge would be virtually impossible to surmount in the coming year.

Laurentis Dismisses Director From 'Ragtime'

Mr. de Laurentis, who had attempted to persuade Mr. de Laurentis to restore the director to his assignment, but failed.

"Mr. de Laurentis owns the property outright," said the director, "and he has every right to act on it as he wishes. I'm naturally disappointed. I feel like Adlai Stevenson—it hurts much to laugh and I'm too old to cry. It's not the artists who are disagreeing, it's money."

Mr. de Laurentis was reported to be in New York yesterday, but could not be reached for comment. The name of Miles Forman was being rumored as a possible successor to Mr. de Laurentis.

A source close to Mr. Altman remarked yesterday that Mr. de Laurentis "lives to keep a tight control over his properties, which is not the way Mr. Altman works. The source added: 'Buffalo Bill and the Indians' would be a big success, and that the rift between Altman and de Laurentis would be smoothed over. So far, it hasn't happened."

Meanwhile, Mr. Altman is getting together with Mr. De Laurentis on the film adaptation of the author's novel, "The Sign of the Cross."

King Kong Plunges as Thousands Gasp

By ROBERT McG. THOMAS JR.
Drawn by 1930's nostalgia and 1976 excitement, a horrified crowd of more than 5,000 New Yorkers surged past police lines at the World Trade Center last night on cue and fought its way to the spot where a giant gorilla lay dead after a 110-story fall from the North Tower.

The scene, constructed of styrofoam covered with horse hair and bleeding a mixture of Karpis syrup and vegetable coloring, was of course King Kong, the resurrected star of the 1933 thriller being remade by Dino De Laurentiis.

The crowd, attracted by newspaper ads seeking unpaid extras for the movie's climac-

Miss Thesmar Stars With City Troupe in 'Sonatine' and 'La Sonambula'

By CLIVE BARNES

One of the most interesting things about the New York City Ballet is its sudden flexibility. It has the capacity to fly into the unexpected. At the moment—and indeed, apparently for all time—it rigorously maintains a no-star policy. Yet it is a policy flexible enough for it to invite guest artists (and one say guest stars) from the Paris Opéra Ballet.

The passed pawn is the stumbling block of the average player. If he follows the edict, "Passed pawns must be kept," he will all too often find the pawn surrounded by a mass of enemy pieces and gobbled up. Wiser and more cautious the next time, he may give up the idea of obtaining a new queen and leave the pawn at home, only to discover that there is then no advantage in having it.

A Story We'd Like to Believe

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

TISHA, The Story of a Young Teacher in the Alaska Wilderness, told to Robert Specht. 258 pages. St. Martin's Press, $8.95.

Do I believe what happened to Anne Hobbs as Robert Specht has recorded it in his "as-told-to" adventure, "Tisha: The Story of a Young Teacher in the Alaska Wilderness"? Actually I do not. But so appealing are the people here, even the villainous ones, so dramatic is the landscape in which they act out their adventure ("As though there had been a shower of diamonds the night before, the whole valley sparkled and glittered with the reflected colors of autumn"), so pure is the moral conflict that forms the story's backbone, and so honest is its sentimentality—that I managed to suspend all my disbelief as I read it. And it was with pleasure that I raced through this good old-fashioned yarn, hissing the villains, holding my breath at each succeeding catastrophe, and above all adoring "plain old Anne Hobbs," as she calls herself, "the pretty slip of a 19-year-old who in 1927 had the courage not only to brave the Alaska wilderness as a teacher in a tiny gold-mining community called Chicken, but also to face down the community's violent disapproval when she dared to treat the local Indians as human beings instead of garbage."

hear that wonderful laugh of his. It's as hard as trying to imagine springtime without the sound of birds." This may look pretty plain by itself, but in context, let me promise you, it's moving.

Suspended Disbelief

In my suspension of disbelief, I loved Anne Hobbs's homespun way of addressing the reader: "Green as goose grass and full of lofty ideals, off I went, thinking of myself as a lamp unto the wilderness. . . I was really a caution." I laughed at her slightly cumbersome anecdotes about the hardships of the Alaska winter—for instance, how one of her pupils got frozen to the seat of the outhouse: "Getting him off turned out to be a major undertaking. We tried pouring warm water around him, but it froze almost as soon as it hit the boards, so finally Mr. Carew had to bring a crowbar and pry the boards off. The outhouse was a two-holer, so we carried Willard into my quarters. . . We propped one end of the boards on the stove and the other over a chair and he sat as calm as you please until he thawed off."

As for Anne's main adventure, I ate up every old-fashioned twist in it, from the pistol she packs with her into Chicken (which must surely be fired, at some point in the story) to the dogged race to which one villain keeps challenging Anne's half-Indian lover (which eventually comes off as part of the book's frenetic climax).

And if the artifice of it all demands that one suspend one's disbelief to swallow it, then there is something genuine—almost Scriptural—in Anne's concluding remarks: "I'm 87 years old now. [My husband] passed away 10 years ago, and although I've since gotten over the sharp pain of losing him, I still miss him badly at times, mostly when there's a gentle rain falling. I think of it falling so quietly all over the hills, soaking into the ground to bring out new life, and it's hard for me to accept that I'm never going to see him again or

Why then do I feel skeptical about the accuracy of this exciting story? First, because the plot is too entertaining, too well-made, with its steadily rising tide of action and its climactic series of close calls and catastrophes. Fate in the wilderness was never as tidy as this. Second, because Anne Hobbs's character also seems too good to be true, a judgment I'd dismiss as unhealthy cynicism were it not that the Anne Hobbs described in the book's publicity material sounds much more like the aggressive do-gooder you'd expect her to be than does the completely virtuous rebel you meet in the book. We have come to expect a little neurosis in even the best of our heroes.

And third, Anne Hobbs's scribe, Robert Specht, a screenwriter by profession, admits in a concluding "Note" that "throughout this work I've tried to keep as close to actual occurrences and facts as I could, adding to them or altering them only when I deemed it dramatically necessary"—which strikes me as a license with which one could fly to the moon. None of these scraps of evidence amounts to much by itself, but together they suggest a pretty strong case against the book's credibility.

Not that it matters a great deal: "Tisha"—so-called after an Indian child's mispronunciation of the word "teacher"—still gives pleasure as an old-fashioned yarn—a nonfiction novel out of another era, as it were. It's just that the goodness it portrays—not to speak of the neatness of its events—seems more a case of wishful thinking than reality. And without all the artifice, one might have found Anne's story genuinely inspiring.

Reprieve in Italy

Italy's Christian Democratic Party has survived the most critical test of its 30 years in office. But the most powerful Communist Party in the Western world has collected its biggest share ever of the votes for both houses of Parliament and remains in position to influence the course of Italian politics in a major way.

These are the two most important results of the elections for Italy's seventh Parliament since the founding of the Republic in 1948. They do not presage clear sailing for the Government—the 39th of the postwar period—that now must be formed to tackle chronic problems exacerbated by a long political hiatus and a divisive, polarizing election campaign.

Burdened by the usual liabilities of a party too long in power, as well as by raging inflation, a sagging currency and unemployment of 1.2 million, the Christian Democrats won their reprieve chiefly by a campaign aimed at scaring Italian voters to death with the prospect of Communist rule. They regained the vital ground they lost in regional elections last year at the expense of their former democratic coalition partners, but also evidently from voters who usually support the neo-Fascist Italian Social Movement.

Their victory is not likely to produce a climate favorable to the formation of an effective democratic coalition. And the fact that the Christian Democrats reverted to the virulent anti-Communism of the cold war period is certain to make it more difficult for them to obtain Communist support or neutrality for such severe measures as the kind of wage restraint on the trade unions that is essential for Italy's economic recovery.

These aspects of the election do not mean that it was in any sense a victory for the Italian left, however. The Communist gains were certainly less than the party's leaders and many anti-Communists had expected; and they were achieved almost entirely at the expense of Italy's mercurial Socialists. The voters obviously punished the Socialist Party for the fact that it had, for practical reasons, broken down the last two Governments and precipitated a full year ahead of schedule the parliamentary elections that no one else wanted.

The Socialists, who once commanded the support of one Italian voter in every five and who outpolled the Communists in the first postwar election in 1946, paid the price for maneuvers designed to keep them from being squeezed out of contention between the Catholic party on one side and the Communists on the other. Their losses to the Communists further polarize Italy's political spectrum and may make negotiations for a new governing coalition more difficult to achieve than ever.

The Christian Democrats now have a chance—perhaps their last chance—to effect the “national renewal” they have promised. It must be high priority for Italy's allies, and especially the United States, to help in every honorable way—particularly by economic cooperation and assistance—to insure the success of that last chance.

Legislative Priorities

As an exhausted State Legislature stumbles toward adjournment this week, the lawmakers must recognize that the state and local fiscal crises that have dominated their deliberations are far from resolved. A series of emergency measures has succeeded in forestalling disaster, but New York City and a number of other localities and the state itself still face the threat of ultimate bankruptcy unless Governor and Legislature begin at once to attack some fundamental problems.

Pension Reform

Foremost among these unattended problems is a disparate collection of state and local pension systems which lavish on public employees retirement benefits substantially in excess of those enjoyed by workers in most other states and municipalities or in private industry. To support these excessive benefits at levels that are perilously below sound actuarial standards, New York taxpayers are assessed $3.5 billion each year—$1 billion more than the cost of operating all state agencies.

Bucking a tide of political timidity responsive to union pressures and election year anxieties, Senator Fred J. Eckert, Republican-Conservative of Rochester, has bravely introduced a bill that would institute sweeping reforms that have been proposed by the State Pension (Kinzel) Commission and strongly supported by two New York City study groups. The Kinzel Commission has estimated that adoption of these reforms would effect savings totaling $2 billion over the next ten years.

Failure to reform the pension system now will condemn New York to steeply rising future costs which neither the state nor its localities can conceivably afford. Such failure to stand up for the public interest against the special interests whose greed has helped drive city and state toward insolvency would signal utter political bankruptcy.

Tax Reform

If New York is to reverse the flight of industry from the state and stabilize its revenue base, tax reform must also be high on Albany's priority list. A special task force of the Municipal Assistance Corporation has identified a number of taxes that appear especially onerous to business and high-income individuals.

At least one of these—New York City's stock transfer tax—is so clearly detrimental to the city's economic interest as to justify immediate remedial action. Because the transfer tax is particularly burdensome for certain market specialists and has already prompted some firms to leave New York City, State Commerce Commissioner John S. Dyson has rightly called on the Legislature to grant relief at once to these specialists.

Neither city nor state can easily afford the $43 million revenue loss which they would share under the Dyson proposal, but it could prove far more costly in the long run to withhold relief and risk additional defections from the city's vital financial community.

Money and Drugs

As the precariously balanced state budget is already threatened with numerous unforeseen strains, the Governor and lawmakers must exercise unaccustomed discipline in dividing up the $20 million that is available for “supplemental.” One claimant for supplemental funds which we believe merits special consideration is the therapeutic drug program in New York City.

Drug programs took a hard pounding this year in the wake of studies by the State Commission of Investigation that revealed appalling waste and worse in the state-run residential treatment programs. The natural response was to slash at the state programs in order to eliminate waste but the budgetary scythe, having done that, over-shot and mercilessly cut aid to local programs as well.

The results are devastating. The New York Regional Chapter of Therapeutic Communities of America has estimated that, as a result of the state-imposed cuts, at least 12,000 patients now in treatment will be returned either to the streets or to the prison system. For anyone returned to jail—possibly as many as 4,000 former patients—the annual cost to the city will be three times what would be spent on the same person in a therapeutic community.

In addition to slicing inpatient capacities, the cuts will virtually eliminate the abilities of Odyssey House, Daytop Village, Phoenix House and other facilities to continue such services as preventive counseling, outpatient and after-care programs.

The only reasonable way to minimize the damage to these programs and the consequent damage to life in this city is for the Legislature to include in the supplemental amount—in the neighborhood of $2 million—for drug programs sufficient to avoid the crippling impact that the earlier cuts would cause. The Senate has struck a noble pose by passing a $5.5 million drug program, but the legislators know that the Governor will have to veto it if it ever passes the Assembly. Thus, budgetary realities in Albany, and those of the New York streets, dictate that modest but urgent attention be given to the drug issue in the distribution of the supplemental pie.

The Courts

The art of the possible is being applied to what a few weeks ago looked like an impossible attempt to achieve legislative change in the state judicial system. As a result of the legislative leadership's bipartisan agreement on the need for constitutional amendments, what now seems possible includes appointment of judges to the highest appellate court, the Court of Appeals in Albany; creation of a permanent statewide court administrator; and a new method of disciplining judges without the delays caused by the present involved procedures. Regrettably, other important contents of the reform package remain side-tracked.

The appointment by the Governor of the Chief Judge and the Associate Judges of the Court of Appeals should be delayed no longer. The spectacle of this court's members running for office to replace Chief Judge Breitel, when he retires on Dec. 13, 1978, would once again demean that respected bench. The effect would be to affix political party labels to their judicial robes, force them to scrounge for campaign funds and form committees of lawyers to advertise what good judges they are.

The State Office of Court Administration has been operating effectively and independently. To carry out its fundamental task of central administration, the State Legislature now should also approve central financing of the courts.

At present, Albany underwrites only one-fourth of the $275 million total in state court costs; counties, cities and towns pay for the rest. The result is that financially pressed localities, such as New York City, Yonkers and others, are overburdened, court staffs are cut, and justice cannot be delivered expeditiously. State financing of the courts should be a legislative priority.

Unification of the fragmented lower courts within the State Supreme Court and appointment, after screening, of highly qualified jurists are other elements in the court reform package that are in danger of being bypassed. At best, Albany's legislators will only deserve two cheers for court reform.

Snug Harbor

There is no guarantee of salvation, for life or landmarks. One battle leads to another. Sailors Snug Harbor on Staten Island, one of the country's finest Greek Revival groups, is still fighting for survival in spite of its landmark status and the city's purchase of the land and buildings for a cultural center a few years ago.

That act of enlightened civic self-interest seems like a miracle now. But the miracle—the money—has run out. Neglected and fragile, the best of these stately structures are well over a century old; if they are forced to close for lack of funds they will soon be beyond rescue or repair.

The loss would be extremely bitter now, with the beauty and value of the buildings only beginning to be fully understood. The earliest work is of the 1830's; the temple-like connected row is a superb classical landscape in the tradition of Thomas Jefferson's University of Virginia. In some ways, it is almost as fine.

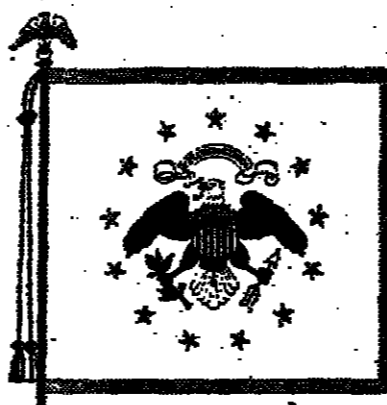

And yet Snug Harbor was slated for demolition a few years ago, and its landmark designation was contested in a lawsuit. Those two battles were won, but the landmark is still endangered. What is needed now is so much less than the city's original heroic rescue: emergency repairs and interim use while the Snug Harbor Cultural Center completes its master plan.

This serene classical treasure overlooking the harbor is worth the short trip to Staten Island on any Bicentennial summer day. In the uncertain present, New Yorkers can still tough their past.

The Making of a Deputy President

To the Editor:
I read with interest your June 14 editorial “The Vice Presidency” and the accompanying Op-Ed article by Jonathan Moore and column by William V. Shannon on choosing the Vice

The flag of the Vice President

Presidential candidates. However, none of the columns touched on what is to me a closely related and equally important question, viz., making the office meaningful and a training ground for the Presidency.

Moore notes that since World War II half of the winning Vice-Presidential candidates have gone on to become President. But how many of these were well prepared to take on their new responsibilities? Why should not our Presidential candidates be asked what steps they would take to make certain their Vice President was well-prepared to assume the Presidency?

As it is now, numerous White House assistants appear to be more deeply involved in policy decisions than is the Vice President. This has been true of most modern Administrations. But is it inevitable? Why should not a Presidential candidate choose for Vice President a person to whom he would feel comfortable in delegating real power? Should not the nation's second-highest elected officer have at least as much power and authority as unelected Cabinet officers and White House staff members?

Should our Presidential candidates agree to grant meaningful responsibility to their Vice President, making him a true “deputy President,” significant results could ensue:

• Better qualified persons might be willing to accept the number two position on their party's ticket.

• But most important, a Vice President who succeeded to the Presidency would have been intimately involved in the development and implementation of national policy and programs.

Of Health Services, Patients and Bills

To the Editor:
Robert M. Jay states in his June 9 letter that the doctor/businessman feels free of guilt because the patient/consumer, although unhappy about high bills, is not paying them out of his own pocket. This is a conclusion in the absence of supporting evidence.

I submit that the only criterion in assessing one's guilt or guiltlessness relates to the fairness and appropriateness of the fee involved rather than to the presence or absence of insurance coverage. Mr. Jay has made a sweeping generalization which may apply to some physicians but certainly not to all.

Mr. Jay then goes on to relate his experience of receiving a bill for $115 for fifteen minutes of a doctor's time. Though the doctor's response, as he relates it, referring to his insurance coverage, is unfortunate and inappropriate, it nevertheless is not prima facie evidence that the original fee was unfair or inflated because of the presence of insurance coverage. The remainder of Mr. Jay's comments are specious because, once assuming that the original fee was unfair and inappropriate, he proceeds as though this assumption were a proven fact. We are told nothing about what transpired during those fifteen minutes, the cost of any medications involved, laboratory procedures, X-rays and a host of other possible valid explanations.

I certainly have no argument with Mr. Jay in his desire for a high-quality medical system with fair and appropriate fees commensurate with the services rendered. However, I must object to his indicting a particular physician in the absence of substantiating evidence and to his rush to generalize his faulty indictment to the remainder of the medical community.

HERBERT H. HOFFNER, M.D.
Far Rockaway, N. Y., June 11, 1976

To the Editor:
The statements and conclusions in Robert M. Jay's letter, “To Pay a Physician,” really hit home.

Three years ago, prior to the birth of my son, my wife and I received a bill for $50 from the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Anesthesia Group. Mind you, this was at least two months before his birth. Included with the bill was a letter stating that the $50 was to be paid prior to my wife's entering the hospital, and in the event that no anesthesia services were rendered there would be no refund because this was their standard policy.

Since I never pay for anything until I have received the services or the goods involved, I ignored this blatant rifting of my pockets. Naturally, we are covered by insurance, which will pay $35 in anesthesia benefits; but I still would not pay it because I thought, why should I?

As it turned out, my wife had natural childbirth and no anesthetic was involved. To this day we receive a monthly bill (think of the postage) for $50. But no threat to sue has reached our door, and probably because the group is aware of the shaky ground on which they stand.

It makes me wonder how many people may have been taken advantage of by what I feel is unethical practice. How much have we, the public, been paying in increased premiums for such practices? Is there any group in our society left that still operates (no pun intended) ethically?

Angola: Blueprint for Peace

To the Editor:
Your June 4 news article “New Cuban Activities in Angola Reported” is a reminder of the continuing state of war in Angola, especially in the center and south, where the guerrilla warfare waged by UNITA is intensifying. This—and in view of the Cuban role of fighting for and protecting M.P.L.A.—baffles the seriousness of the recent flurry of news about a Cuban pull-out.

Rumors of Cuban withdrawal now appear to be a smokescreen designed to satisfy United States conditions for recognition of the Luanda Government as well as its admission to the United Nations. But the Soviet-Cuban military occupation of Angola continues.

Presently there are over 25,000 Cuban troops in Angola. At the alleged withdrawal rate of 200 men per week, a total of about 6,000 will have gone home (or elsewhere) by the end of this year. However, it has also been asserted that Castro estimates to complete his pull-out by the end of this year.

It is therefore conceivable that by December many countries might simply accept the remaining (19,000 or more) Cubans in Angola as “just advisers” of one category or another. True, Angola needs technical assistance for its reconstruction. But this must not be confused with acceptance of the Soviet-sponsored undemocratic minority rule in Angola, which we must strongly resist to the end. Unpopular, repressive rule smacks of the atrocious Portuguese colonialism still fresh in our memories.

Unless the international community helps to bring about an effective government which can unify the country and the people, the withdrawal per se will not end Angola's plight. After all, M.P.L.A. can readily replace the departing Cubans with other foreign “military advisers.”

No government can effectively function in Angola unless it fully includes UNITA as a major national party. Notwithstanding its devastating effect, war is being pursued because it has been imposed upon Angola. Peace in Angola requires a political solution based on the formation of a government of national unity rather than on a foreign-fanned attempt at eliminating the grass roots' party, UNITA.

Kibbee's Way

To the Editor:
Controller Goldin's call for resignation of CUNY Chancellor Kibbee reflects a continuing regarding conditions within University. In so doing, he ignores the chancellor's restructuring plan, announced October, which calls for the of full-time equivalent CUNYments by 20 percent over three years, the tightening admissions standards, eliminating major programs and additional student charges. This plan has not approved, it has also been panned by the imposition of which will surely guarantee enrollment reductions, even promises of additional state the CUNY reopening funds just approved in Albany.

Perhaps most important, is the fact that practically national institution has the short-term budgetary flexibility. Mr. Goldin presumes to CUNY. Once students have admitted to an institution, relatively fixed within an year. Since full-time teachers for the overwhelming share of national costs, CUNY institutions sought to achieve short-term through all other available in reductions in capital equipment, supplies, support teaching resources that do void contractual violations.

Any additional short-term can only be achieved by fire time faculty within an academic year. To do so would not only impair the quality of education CUNY, it would also destroy the ability of an institution to attract and retain kind of bright and capable faculty which both the future of the city depend. Chancellor's decision to preserve for as possible the quality of CUNY education clearly shows far more imagination than the utterances that are occasional to assure investor confidence.

To Cut Hospital Cost

To the Editor:
It appears from the news on the negotiations between League of Voluntary Hospital Local 1199 of the National Hospital and Health Care Employees Union that the real issues underlying controversy are not being addressed. The Federal fact-finding panel to try to avert a strike of the workers in New York City and hospitals recommended arbitration of a cost-of-living-increasing arbitration if the hospitals reach an impasse. The hospitals claim they have no for any increases because of and Blue Cross would not them for any wage increase fiscal crisis. The state and Blue Cross cannot reimburse the hospital union because the cost of care has quintupled in the past years.

Neither the union nor the wish to recognize that the to the problem is in changing rent system. Studies by Roe others indicate that between 50 percent of present hospital are medically unnecessary. As to change the indications for admission would save large money. Many other studies shown that costly diagnostic rarely help people. And to develop a rational system costly diagnostic procedure save large sums of money. more, it is clear that alternate hospitalization such as home care save considerable sums of money. The negotiations, therefore, concerned with restructuring tem so that hospitals could be for real need and not the the hospitals, physicians and

The Genteel Triumph

To the Editor:
The June 15 news story White's correspondence with Xerox Corporation is heartening several counts. It demonstrates again the power and the sweet reason, especially well expressed in a style once dear Mr. White's old colleague, Ian Barber, as “those silver and crytances which have a ring like of nobody else's sentences world.”

It provides a rare example passionate dissent expressed manner respectful of an view. Perhaps in this age of confrontation and the breaking nature and bones, it will see what too genteel. 'The Sahel Is Not a Wasteland'

By John W. Sewell

WASHINGTON—An American visit- ing the Sahel—the sub-Saharan region of West Africa—for the first time carries the mental images of the great drought: barren land and emaciated children. It comes as a shock when reality does not match the image.

The Sahel has survived its worst drought in fifty years, and the region's prospects are promising if the coun- tries of the area and the industrial world make the necessary commit- ments. Only a few short years ago, many people maintained that the area was beyond hope and should be aban- doned. Why the difference now? The answer is that under the impact of catastrophic drought most of us forgot that the Sahel countries are not en- tirely without resources of their own.

First, the Sahel is not a uniform area. It contains six countries—Sen- egal, Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Upper Volta—and at least five distinct geographic regions ranging from desert in the far north to the edge of tropical rain forest in the south. The population is concentrated in the more promising agricultural areas.

Second, there is great potential for producing more food. The Sahel produces about 5.5 million tons of grain a year, and experts estimate that proper policies and investment—par- ticularly in irrigation—can multiply this level five- or sixfold. The poten- tial is enhanced by the presence in the seven states of a major lake basin and three major river systems, including the Niger, the world's twelfth largest.

Some of the best agricultural land in the Volta River valleys even now is being cleared of the fly that trans- mits river blindness, and will be open for resettlement shortly. The newcomer sees this potential most dramatically in the magnificent vegetables and fruits in the local markets.

Finally, the casual observer may also forget that these are not new societies; they have been around quite a while, and are remarkably well adapted to an often harsh and demand- ing environment. In years of normal rainfall, enough food is produced to feed the population (albeit at minimal nutritional levels), and a thriving cat- tle trade with the coastal countries has existed for centuries.

What then are the prospects for the future? Paradoxically the drought had at least one beneficial result: it broke the patterns of the past. The Sahel countries have muted their traditional rivalries and are now coordinating their own development plans.

Along with some members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and the industrial world, they established in April the Club des Amis du Sahel to coordinate plans for long-term development in the area. The United States, which virtually with- drew its aid missions in the Sahel a decade ago, is now taking the lead

In establishing a long-term investment fund for the area.

But one should not be too optimis- tic. If a real commitment is not made now, the future looks much less prom- ising. Population growth, which intes- sified the impact of the last drought, will continue to exert inexorable pres- sures. Periodic drought, whether local or general, is inevitable. Climatic re- cords show that one year in five will be bad, and that a serious drought equal to the recent catastrophe will occur twice a century.

Finally, we must not forget that the Sahel countries are among the world's poorest. Even with the best of efforts, they can generate very little savings to pay for imports needed for develop- ment. Without outside financial and technical help to match their own ef- forts, the necessary increases in pro- duction of food and cattle will be impossible.

Finally, the lessons of the past must be learned. Development plans for the Sahel must be designed and carried out in conjunction with the Sahel governments and in a way that enhances and does not destroy both the ecosys- tems and societies of the Sahel.

During his recent trip to Africa, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger committed the United States to an international development effort for the Sahel. In supporting this effort, the nations of the world would contribute to the solution of the world food prob- lem and would avoid the cost of a relief effort similar to that of recent years, an effort that by 1985 might cost three times as much.

The Sahel is not a wasteland. With proper management and outside finan- cial help, it can produce enough food to meet its own needs and those of neighboring countries.

John W. Sewell, vice president of the Overseas Development Council, a private research and educational organi- zation, visited the Sahel in the spring.

Strike Four

By Russell Baker

As a baseball fan, I realize I am supposed to be dumb; and I try hard. Half the sports writers assume I am an idiot, the players hold me in contempt, those company flaks who describe games on television assume I am too stupid to tell a real reporter from a shill, and the club owners—well, the club owners deserve a book on the subject of how to get rich by never underestimating the stupidity of the fans.

In Washington not long ago there was a club owner who regularly sold me cold hot dogs for 50 cents apiece. Did I throw the mustard pot at his limousine? Did I stop buying his frigid hot dogs? You bet your collection of World Series peanut shells I didn't. I knew that as a fan I was expected to be dumb enough not to make a scene.

In New York, the club owners have just tapped the municipal treasury for $100 million and change to improve the Yankee Stadium. That's money the city could be using to increase the frequency of dog-dung removal from the sidewalk in front of my house, but I'm not kicking. I'm a fan, I am eager to rush up to the Bronx and lay out more cash to get into the stadium I'm paying the city to provide the owners.

If enough of us fans don't pay to get in, the club owners might move the team to Astoria. And what is a fan's life without a home team to run up his taxes, sell him cold hot dogs and treat him like a prize ass?

So, as a fan I struggle to be as dumb as possible. There are limits, however, to what can be swallowed, and the hypocrisy of the whole baseball racket as displayed this past week puts a heavy burden on my powers to go on playing the sap.

For one thing, I am unable to shud- der with dismay because Charles O. Finley sold three human beings he owned in Oakland to buyers in Boston and New York. My first reaction to the news that he had cleared a cool $3.5 million in the flesh market was a satisfied confirmation of my suspicion that Finley is the smartest operator in baseball.

Because of recent legal changes in the law governing club owners' own- ership of people, Finley was about to lose the chance to market those three bodies for any price at all. By getting them sold before his title to them be- came void, he turned a total loss into a tidy sum of cash. Smart dealer, that Charlie O. Or so I thought.

It was the wrong thing for a fan to think. The next day's papers laid out the proper line in angry sports columns and purple comment from other club owners and fans alike. Finley's sale was BAD FOR BASEBALL.

These are terrible words, the worst that tongue can utter among the faith- ful. I have never risen to them with true believer's zeal. It seems to me that almost everything that has hap- pened in baseball lately, except last fall's World Series, has been disas- trous for baseball. It is hard to get upset by something that is merely bad for baseball.

Nevertheless, the incantation had been uttered and, being a true fan, I put on my dunce cap and tried to follow the argument. It required mind- boggling labors at "micrompoetry." First there was the uproar about its being disgraceful to sell players for cash, like so much baled cotton.

No fan with his half-a-brain could accept this. The great Babe Ruth him- self was sold for a mere sheaf of bucks, by the Boston Red Sox to the Yankees. Did these whiners mean that the Babe's going to the Bronx and building the House that Ruth Built was bad for baseball? Connie Mack had trafficked widely in bodies almost as glorious, and was in the Hall of Fame.

Well, there was the complaint that rich teams would end up owning all the talent and make it impossible for other teams even to win champion- ships. This was an unappealing argu- ment for a fan who had paid 50 cents per stomach spasm to eat cold hot dogs in the realm of the Washington Senators, who hadn't won a champion- ship since the bank holiday.

In some towns, the best the fans could hope for was a perpetual loser because, if your team started winning, the club owner promptly moved it to another town. Calvin Griffith did this with the Senators and Walter O'Malley with the old Brooklyn Dodgers.

Finally, fans were asked to believe that sordid cash transactions would leave them cynical and embittered, that we would now look upon baseball as a cross commercial operation in- stead of the national pastime. I choked laughing on this one. Players are abandoning the home team for million- dollar contracts, owners are moving the old home team franchise from town to town like carnivals in search of suckers, and they are afraid we might get the impression that some- body in baseball is interested in money.

This is the ultimate insult to the fan's intelligence. I am willing to work hard at being dumb enough to suit this gang of sharpsters, so long as they play the game occasionally between multimillion-dollar heists, but, even as a fan, I can't be stupid enough to weep at the discovery that they aren't the kind of folks who would rather be running a church supper.

Economic Summitry

By Robert Kleiman

WASHINGTON—"We have learned after destructive wars that world peace is indivisible, but we must have a better appreciation of the fact that the world economy, too, has become indivisible," West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt told Americans last fall.

This truism was brought home by the global inflation of 1972-73 and "competitive deflation" of 1974 that pushed the world into its deepest depression and highest unemployment rate since the 1930's. Yet the inter- dependence of the industrial nations is in danger of being forgotten again, now that a rapid economic resurgence has taken hold almost everywhere.

That is the most compelling reason—not domestic politics—behind the decision to hold in Puerto Rico next weekend an economic summit meeting of the free world's principal industrial powers.

The meeting of the presidents and prime ministers of North America, Japan and Europe's Common Market—represented by West Germany, Britain, France and Italy—is the kind of followup considered, but not agreed upon, at last November's Rambouillet conference near Paris, history's first free-world economic summit. That a followup is taking place is even more important than the substantive ques- tions to be discussed.

The chief substantive problem now is how to sustain the current recovery over a prolonged period. To avoid a repetition of the 1972-75 "boom-bust" cycle, it is essential to head off an in- flationary spiral that would force recovery to be braked before unemploy- ment is absorbed. Long-term structural imbalances must be faced before they dangerously divide the industrial world into a two-tier system. The healthier economies are growing ever stronger, while the ailing are becoming weaker, further widening the gap between them.

The essential answers to these ques- tions are political much more than economic. What the industrial nations most lack is a mechanism for joint management of economic policy in the United States, West Europe and Japan. Since the Great Depression of the 1930's, the intervention of govern- ments to manage domestic economies has become accepted, even demanded, in every advanced country. And within each government, the critical decisions on economic strategy are taken at the White House level.

Internationally, for 17 years lip ser- vice has been paid to cooperation in the shaping of national policies that im- pact on the economies of other coun- tries. There has been intermittent consultation, below the summit-level, especially during crises. But decisions on interest rates, money supply, ex- change rates, tax levels, budget deficits and economic stimulus or restraint have continued to be made by each government, with little thought about the effect on others.

Crisis management by the central bankers of the industrial nations during periods of monetary turbulence has been increasingly effective. But inter- national economic policy machinery for avoiding crises is a half-century behind the times.

The stakes are high. World trade has climbed twice as rapidly as world output of goods and services, soaring from 8 percent to 16 percent of the gross international product. Some European countries sell 25 percent or more of their national output abroad.

Exports from the United States in less than two decades have quintupled to the staggering total of $107 billion a year. From 3.5 percent of the gross national product, they have climbed to over 7 percent; if services are excluded these sales represent almost 20 percent of the factory and farm output of the United States.

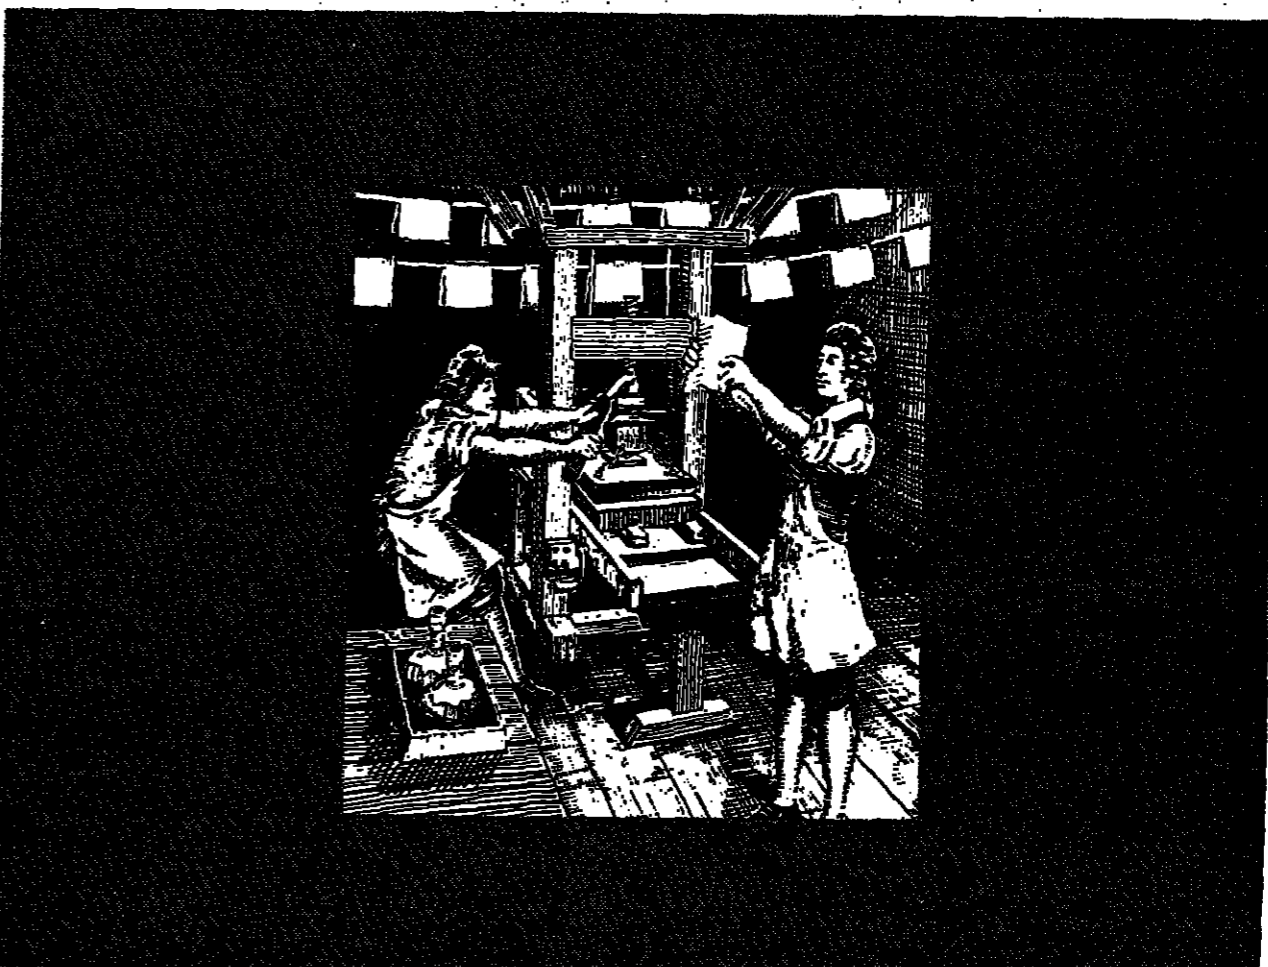

Secretary Kissinger's hope before Rambouillet was that the meeting would initiate a continuing system of "cooperative decisions" on economic policy by the main industrial nations. He proposed that the governments set "common goals" and take "measures in common," then "meet periodically (on the ministerial level) to follow up on policy directions set at the summit and to review what further decisions may be needed" from further meetings of the heads of state.

French Gaullist opposition to "in- stitutionalizing the summit" prevented agreement on this plan at Rambouillet. But Puerto Rico keeps the door open.

The leaders of the industrial world have other important issues to address in Puerto Rico involving trade, energy, exports of nuclear technology, agri- culture, commodities and North-South relations in general. By far the most urgent question is not on the agenda at all and is scheduled to be discussed in private: a parallel effort by the United States and Common Market to ease the economic burdens in Italy that have enabled the Communists to make dangerous political gains there.

The important question is whether Puerto Rico serves vital national and world interests. The answer is clear. A continuing series of such economic summits, with followup work in between, is a necessity if the free world is to get the common goals, joint de- cisions and coordinated action that interdependence demands.

Robert Kleiman is a member of the Editorial Board of The Times.

The first free press was printed in 1690. It lasted one day.

It all started in this country when Benjamin Harris printed a small paper in Boston. He called it Publick Occurrences Both Foreign and Domestic.

You see, Harris thought collecting the news, printing it carefully and responsibly and selling it to the community could be a respectable business. One that both he and the people in his community could profit from.

But he ran into trouble on his first issue. Not for printing libels, but for printing the truth. Because printing anything with- out the authority and approval of the Crown was forbidden.

His paper was immediately suppressed and the remaining copies destroyed.

But the idea of a free press didn't die. Time after time new newspapers were born. And snuffed out. Until a Revolution, a Constitution and finally a Bill of Rights would make freedom of the press, and the right to know, a legal business in this land.

The 33 newspapers that make up Knight-Ridder are dedicated to the business of a free press. We are dedicated to using this freedom responsibly, and defending it when necessary.

We believe that each one of our newspapers should be free to serve the needs of its community in its own way.

All working to promote and preserve the highest editorial and reportorial standards.

Most people have forgotten Benjamin Harris. But they should never forget what he tried to do. We haven't.

Still, the children seemed not to notice. "Where's my half a dollar?" Sidney demanded. "Your half a dollar?" Amy squealed incredulously. "I found it," Sidney said, defiantly. "It wasn't nothing to do with work." "Oh, yes it was," said John. "Oh, yes it was," said Amy. "Well, I was going to buy me some chewing gum," Sid- sey said, a bit downcast. "Burglar?" Amy squealed. "Yeah, burglar," John echoed, and Sidney struggled and seemed to forget about the chewing gum, at least for the time being. "No Tears," Mrs. Carter emerged from the house, where her husband was taping television com- mercials for the general elec- tion, to fetch her daughter for lunch. "What's that?" she asked, as Amy pulled up her shirt to show a scrape on her side from a fall she had taken. "She tripped on a stump," John explained. "She was running," Sidney said, "but she can't run as fast as me." "Can too," Amy argued. "Cannot," said Sidney.

"Can too," said Amy, "and anyway I didn't cry." Amy Carter was born in 1968, 15 years after the birth of her parents' youngest son, Jeff, and 21 years after her parents' marriage. She "made us young again, rebound our family together and [was] a source of joy, pride and delight," her father has written in his autobiog- raphy. "Her three brothers are so much older that it is almost as though she has four fathers, and we have to stand in line to spoil her." Amy was 3 years old in 1971 when her family moved into the Governor's mansion in Atlanta where, four days a week, week in and week out, public tour groups tramped through the house. "She was always bumping into people she didn't know," Mrs. Carter recalled today. "So all of this is really nothing new to her—and frankly, I think she's remarkably well adjusted." Tended by a succession of black maids, Amy learned the Southern black idiom and often spoke it, sometimes to the delight, sometimes to the ex- asperation of her parents and their friends. Once, a few years ago, when her father reprimanded her table manners, she eyed him coolly and said, "I ain't studying you"—meaning that she was paying no attention to him. That isn't likely to happen to Amy Carter for a long long time.

Fiscal Crises Keep Official Lobbyists Busy

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, June 21—Two dozen lobbyists clustered in the marble cor- ridor outside the entrance to the House of Representatives, hawking their wares like competing fishmongers seeking to be heard above the din they had cre- ated, as the Congressmen ran the gait- let to enter the House chamber and cast their votes. "We oppose the Fountain amend- ment," shouted Bruce Kirschenbaum, Mayor Beame's man in Washington, as Representative Bella S. Abzug, Demo- crat of Manhattan, hurried past. His ad- vice was echoed by lobbyists from the A.F.L.-C.I.O., the United States Confer- ence of Mayors and several public-inter- est groups. "We support the Fountain amend- ment," shouted James Larocca, Gov- ernor Carey's man in Washington, whose advice was echoed by lobbyists from other states, the White House, the Na- tional Governors' Conference, the Na- tional Association of County Organi- zations, and several public-interest groups. Mrs. Abzug turned on Mr. Larocca. "The Governor is not my mentor," she said testily, adding that she planned to oppose the amendment. Representative Shirley Chisholm, Democrat of Brooklyn, given the same divided advice, asked, "Can't you guys get together?" "We need the bucks," Mr. Kirschen- baum replied.

Shared Funds at Issue
The Fountain amendment, named for its sponsor, Representative L. H. Fountain, Democrat of North Carolina, sought to wipe out a proposed change in the Federal revenue-sharing formula. It passed the House, at a cost to the city of $9 million, but gave the state $5 million it otherwise would have lost. The entire city delegation voted against the amendment, but a dozen upstarts, including some Democrats, supported it. "Every little thing is so crucial," Mr. Kirschenbaum said after the vote, referring to the city's fiscal crisis. "We can't afford to lose anything." Mr. Larocca, however, feared that a $9 million New York City windfall could jeopardize the entire bill by giving it the "stigma" of a New York City bill. "We're trying to get the least en- cumbered revenue package," he said. Mr. Kirschenbaum and Mr. Larocca are usually comrades in arms in im- portant legislative battles. More often than not, they are joined by Marilyn Berry, who represents Governor Byrne of New Jersey, and Susan M. Tannen- baum, who represents Governor Ellis T. Grasso of Connecticut. Their styles are dissimilar. Mr. Kir- schenbaum, a 31-year-old lawyer, who earns $75,000 a year, and whose father, Irvin, is a State Supreme Court Justice, is a fast-talking, fast-thinking man who overflows with ideas and enthusiasm. Mr. Larocca, a 32-year-old lawyer who earns $40,000 a year, is calm and avun- cular, a young old-pro who is imagina- tive but reassuring. Miss Tannenbaum, who is 31 and earns $20,000 a year, is energetic yet coolly professional, while Marilyn Berry, who is 29 and earns $26,500, is a fast- paced lobbyist with an encyclopedic knowledge of Washington that is leav- ened by a personal touch. They are among the representatives of 20 states and 50 cities here whose job is to shake the Federal money Continued on Page 70, Column 1

The Major Events of the Day

International
The Christian Democrats kept their place as Italy's dominant party in the national elections, but their chief rival, the Communist Party, was not far behind and substantially added to its seats in the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. The Communists' position was believed to be strong enough now for them to demand a place in the Cabinet. With more than 96 percent of the vote counted yesterday for 315 Senate seats, the Christian Democrats led by 39 percent, and the Communists 33.8 percent. In the 630-member Chamber of Deputies, nearly complete figures gave the Christian Democrats 38.7 percent, and the Communists 34.9 percent. In the last parliamentary elections in 1972, the Christian Democrats won 38.3 percent of the vote, and the Communists 27.2 percent. [Page 1, Column 8.]
Rioting broke out in the black townships around Pretoria in South Africa soon after rioting subsided in similar townships near Johannesburg, 50 miles to the south. In Pretoria, bands of young people overturned buses, set fire to schools and Government offices and threw stones at passing cars. Ten persons were reported to have been killed and scores injured. Security forces, armed with submachine guns and grenade launchers, barricaded the roads leading to the black communities. [1:6-7.]
The Government of Iran announced that it intends to purchase a $125 million share in the Occidental Petroleum Corporation of Los Angeles and that Occidental will help Iran develop oil resources in the Caspian Sea. The agreement, which also includes joint ventures in marketing Iranian oil in world markets and in breeding cattle, would be the largest Iranian investment in a United States company. [1:6-7.]

National
The Supreme Court ruled on a 5-to-4 vote that states may provide funds for nonsec- tarian purposes to church-affiliated colleges and universities, even when prayers are said at the start of classes in those schools and religion and theology are mandatory courses. The decision in a Maryland case was the latest in a long series of efforts by the Court to draw an appropriate line between church and state and it seems that the line was moved closer to church than it had been. Midshipman Fights Marijuana Charge, Kings Point Ouster
Yesterday was graduation day for 220 members of the senior class at the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, L.I.—but not for Kenneth O. Ekelund 2d, an honor student with a family tradition in the military.
Midshipman Ekelund spent the day in Federal Court in Brooklyn fighting his recent dismissal from the Academy on a charge of possessing a little cadets in a room across the hall- juana. The marijuana charge was dismissed in County Court. The 22-year-old midshipman's problems started last Feb. 20 when a Kings Park village patrolman, Albert Vernaskas, spotted two cadets parked in a car in a parking lot near the Academy.
Because they were not allowed to park there, the police officer approached the car to investigate. He found the two drinking beer, searched their car and found some marijuana. He arrested the two cadets and one told him that he had purchased the marijuana from Midshipman Ekelund.
Later, in the company of the Academy's security officer, Lieut. Comdr. Timothy D. Ford, Patrolman Vernaskas went to Mr. Ekelund's quarters to conduct a search.
Patrolman Vernaskas found a little more than an ounce of marijuana in Midshipman Ekelund's room. The midshipman was charged with criminal possession by the Nassau County District Attorney's office.
Even though the charges were dismissed in Nassau County Court, the Academy ordered Midshipman Ekelund dismissed. In fighting this action, the midshipman won a temporary restraining order to allow him to take his final examinations for graduation. The present court action seeks a permanent restraining order so that Mr. Ekelund may be allowed to graduate and accept a berth on a ship.

PARKS SPRUCE-UP BEGUN BY BEAUME

He Invites Help of Citizens in Ceremony Near Tombs

By NATHANIEL SHEPPARD Jr. Mayor Beame announced the start yesterday of an ambitious program to give citizens a greater role in keeping city parks clean and green.

Aided by a $100,000 grant from the State Department of Parks and Recreation and contributions from private citizen's groups, neighborhood groups will be encouraged to initiate and support projects such as mural painting, tree planting, erosion control and trail marking, Mr. Beame said.

Speaking from the pavilion at Columbus Park, behind the Tombs prison, the Mayor said the project was "an excellent example of the kind of cooperation and participation which will help the city solve its problems."

"Our citizens cherish their parks... and that's why this citizens' campaign to help our parks keep their charm is most likely to succeed," Mayor Beame told his audience, composed of newsmen, government aides and public-relations personnel.

After a ceremonial speech in which he thanked those who had contributed financially to the project, Mr. Beame shook all hands that were extended in the small gathering and kissed several babies.

The Mayor then dipped a paint brush into a can of yellow paint and, with three delicate strokes on the pavilion's archway, began the beautification program at the two-block long park.

Graffiti Removal Planned... The Chinatown Planning Council plans a project in which graffiti is to be removed from the pavilion and replaced with a mural painted by local high school students.

Flanked by Orin Lehman, the State Parks Commissioner, and Martin Land, Commissioner of the City Parks Department, along with representatives of two citizen's groups that co-sponsored the project, Mr. Beame said most of the $100,000 state grant would be used for park maintenance.

About 20 percent of the total is to be used for recreational activities, the City Parks Department said.

The Citizens Committee for New York City, one of the co-sponsors, will provide incentive grants of up to $100 to neighborhood and local groups that agree to help maintain parks on a regular basis.

Metropolitan Briefs

3 Held in Plot to Rob Bank

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and members of the Police Department's major case squad who staked out a branch of the Manufacturers Hanover Bank at 210 Flushing Avenue in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn rounded up three armed men apparently planning a robbery. The police, it was learned, had been tipped off by a fourth man, Eugene Welcome, 28 years old, who had been arraigned on Friday and ordered held in $250,000 bail in connection with the armed robbery on March 1 of a branch of the Chemical Bank at 395 Flatbush Avenue, in which he got more than $50,000. Arraigned yesterday in Federal District Court were Robert Jackson, 26; William Scott, 25, and Martin Allen, 28. Two of the three—Mr. Jackson and Mr. Allen—were in a late-model battered rust-colored Lincoln, in which the authorities said they found two sawed-off shotguns, a toy pistol, handcuffs and masks. Magistrate Vincent A. Catoggio ordered each of the three held in $100,000 bail.

All 16 Grasso Vetoes Stand Up

The Connecticut General Assembly met for a few hours, failed to muster the votes to override any of Gov. Ella Grasso's 16 vetoes and did not correct errors in legislation already signed into law. The House voted to re-pass three of the rejected measures, but none won the necessary three-thirds support in the Senate. The Democratic-controlled legislature adjourned by mid-afternoon.

Legislative leaders decided not to bother with a special session to correct flaws in the new state blue law, which inadvertently allows large discount stores to sell anything on Sunday but restricts small grocery stores to a limited list of items, or to correct legislation requiring photos on drivers' licenses but failing to give officials sufficient time to implement it.

Bronx Man Given 25 Years in Rape

A State Supreme Court justice in the Bronx imposed the maximum 25-year sentence on a Bronx man convicted of raping a 17-year-old girl. Mario Merola, the Bronx District Attorney, said that under the terms of the sentence, imposed by Justice Stanley Ostrau, the defendant, James Blount, 26, of 1538 Minford Place in the Bronx, must serve at least 12 1/2 years before becoming eligible for parole. The rape took place in Crotona Park last December.

Mr. Merola said that Mr. Blount had previously served four years of a seven-year sentence for a 1968 conviction of sexually abusing a 13-year-old girl and had been found not guilty in two other rape cases earlier this year.

De Camp Buses to Resume Runs

An official of De Camp Bus Lines said that partial service would be restored tomorrow following a month-long strike, but the company appeared headed for a clash with the New Jersey Board of Public Utility Commissioners over plans to abandon two of its nine routes.

The bus line said that two intrastate lines—No. 22 between Jersey City and Caldwell and Nos. 145-146 between Newark and Morristown—would not be resumed. However, Joel R. Jacobson, president of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners, told the bus line that "service may not be curtailed or discontinued without this board's permission."

Bandits Steal $50,000 Coin Collection

Two bandits posing as coin traders invaded the Brooklyn home of a numismatist and fled with a collection of rare coins valued at $50,000 and $15,000 in jewelry after hand-cuffing the owner, his wife and daughter at gunpoint. The victim, Karl Fishberg of 629 East 79th Street in the Canarsie section, his wife, Esther, and 17-year-old daughter, Elaine, were not injured. The stolen collection consisted of several series containing hundreds of coins, most of them minted in the United States in the 18th and 19th centuries, the police said.

CONVICTION UPSET IN SEX-ABUSE CASE

Police Investigator's Spying on Doctor is Ruled Illegal

By MAX H. SEIGEL

Dr. William Abruzzi, the physician who gained public notice as the "Rock Doc" of the Woodstock Festival, won a reversal yesterday of his conviction last year on charges of sexual misconduct with patients seeking gynecological treatment.

By a vote of 3 to 2, the Appellate Division of the Second Judicial Department ruled that the evidence of a New York State Police investigator who reported seeing Dr. Abruzzi sexually abuse a 27-year-old woman while she was under anesthesia should have been suppressed.

The investigator had testified that he saw the act on Jan. 30, 1974, while perched on a seven-foot ladder, peering into slits in heavily curtained windows. He said he had mounted the ladder to look into the windows to protect a policeman who, posing as a patient, had gone into a neighboring examination room during the investigation.

The policeman, a member of the New York City Police Department's sex crimes unit, had been called into the case to get a look at the inside of the physician's office after several of his patients had complained over a period of 18 months that Dr. Abruzzi had gone into a sexual misconduct, including sodomy and rape, during regular gynecological examinations.

Betty J. Santangelo, the lawyer for Dr. Abruzzi, had moved to have the investigator's evidence suppressed on the ground that it constituted a warrantless search. The Dutchess County Court denied the motion on Nov. 29, 1974. A little more than a week later, Dr. Abruzzi pleaded guilty to a charge of sexual abuse.

His lawyer said he had entered the guilty plea so that the court's rejection of the motion to suppress the investigator's evidence could be appealed.

In overturning the lower court, the Appellate Division majority held that a doctor's office is an area "in which there is a reasonable expectation of freedom from governmental intrusion." As a result, it added, searches conducted without prior approval by judge or magistrate are, per se, unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment.

Helping New York Classes Aid Retarded In Reaching Potential

By BARBARA CAMPBELL

There is a group of children in the city who receive little or no schooling. For the most part, they are children of the poor who have been judged too mentally retarded to attend public school and who spend their days with their parents or guardians. They have little hope for improvement without dependence on others.

Elsie Carrington, a longtime community leader in Harlem, who has worked diligently through the years to help children, believes that many of these children can be helped or educated to "function to their highest potential."

As executive director of a 3-year-old city-financed education program, she aims to prove that these "lost" children, who do not fit into the traditional education system, can learn. "I don't know why," she says, standing in a light and airy classroom at Public School 92, at 222 West 134th Street, where a group of children considered mentally retarded are being given individual attention and instruction. "Somehow, these children were overlooked. Most of them just haven't had any schooling at all."

Children Are Retarded... Classes for 32 children are held at P.S. 92 and at P.S. 76 on West 121st Street. With the skilled instruction of a trained staff of therapists and special-education teacher aides and volunteers, many of the children have made advances, Mrs. Carrington says. Periodically the children are re-tested and some, Mrs. Carrington said, have been re-evaluated and are no longer classified as profoundly mentally retarded.

"They are able to go into special public-school classes," Mrs. Carrington said. Eventually the children, after testing, instruction and training in Mrs. Carrington's program, will be placed in an appropriate learning institution where they can receive further help.

Her program, Mrs. Carrington said, is designed to find these children, to identify their problems, to determine their capabilities and to guide them into a satisfactory school.

Mrs. Carrington, who is executive director of a 10-year-old East Harlem community action program called Community Participation Educational Program Inc., said volunteers were needed to work individually with the children. They can even teach them such basic skills as grooming, for example.

Families Hope $10 Houses Will Be Their Homes

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

Orazio and Marianna Iaboni, who have been married five years and have a 3-year-old daughter, want to get a house of their own at reasonable cost, rather than to continue renting an apartment from Mr. Iaboni's father.

As a result of a "housing lottery" run by the city yesterday, their chances of doing so are good. Cecil Jordan, who is divorced and now rents a room from a relative, also wants a house of his own, one that will be large enough for himself and his son and daughter.

Teen-Age Abortions Without Family Consent Hang in the Balance

By GEORGIA DULLEA

She is 16 years old and she had an abortion at the Eastern Women's Center the other day, perhaps one of the last days that the pregnancy of a minor could be legally terminated in this state without a parent's consent.

Her parents did not discuss sex at home—not openly, she said. They knew nothing of their daughter's sexual activity, much less her pregnancy. And she meant to keep them from knowing "because they already have enough worries."

What if she had needed their permission for this abortion? The girl thought a minute. "I would be very upset," she said at last, "and I would try to find another way of abortion."

For her, the question was theoretical. It may have real significance for other young women, however, depending on the fate of a bill now on Governor Carey's desk. The Governor has until midnight tonight to sign or veto the bill; if he fails to act it becomes law without his signature.

Known as the parental consent bill, this measure carries criminal penalties for doctors performing abortions on minors without the consent of a parent or guardian. Only minors who are married or who have borne a child would be excluded in the bill. But, to judge by 1975 statistics in New York City alone, thousands of others would be affected.

Last year, 13,477 pregnancies were reported here in the 14-through-17-year-old group. Of these, 7,090 were legally aborted. Planned Parenthood of New York City, which performed almost a third of those abortions, estimates that half the patients would have been unable or unwilling to get consent slips in time for first trimester (12 weeks) abortions.

"What concerns us," said Alfred F. Moran, the executive vice president there, "is that many teen-agers will delay telling their parents, forcing them into second trimester abortions, which carry a much higher risk."

As he spoke, lawyers for Planned Parenthood were already drafting papers for a temporary restraining order request—to be filed if the bill is signed. Elsewhere, in licensed clinics and hospitals around the city, young teen-agers applying for abortions were being booked without delay.

"But how do you get to kids and tell them to hurry up?" asked Libby Rubin, administrator of the Eastern Women's Center on East 80th Street.

On the cork bulletin board behind her, the sign that only two weeks ago had called for letters to the State Assembly urging a "no" vote on the bill had been replaced by a more up-to-date version.

Now the letters were to go to Governor Carey and the message was "veto it." The Governor has given no public indication of his intention despite strong pressure from proponents and opponents alike.

Supporters argue that the bill will, among other things, protect minors and their families from what Helen Greene, chairman of the New York State Right to Life Committee, called "exploitative medical practices in abortion."

Supporters of the abortion bill requiring teen-agers to obtain the consent of their parents claim that it will protect minors and their families from what is termed "exploitative medical practices." Critics contend that the bill will actually promote such practices.

Critics, on the other hand, contend the bill will actually promote such practices by closing the doors of reputable medical facilities to teen-agers and once again opening the abortion mills.

"I see no good coming out of this legislation that is supposed to strengthen relationships between parents and children who get into trouble," Dr. Jean Pakter, director of the city's maternity services and family planning bureau, said. She predicted more unwanted teen-age births, more illegal and self-induced abortions, and more of the later, riskier abortions.

"You might as well say they need parental consent before they become pregnant," Dr. Pakter declared. "Legislating parental consent is poppycock." In any event, a number of other states have at least tried it. The justification for such consent laws has been that parents have rights and duties concerning minors and that minors need parent guidance to protect them. The reaction of the courts has been mixed.

In Massachusetts and seven other states, consent laws were struck down by Federal courts as an infringement of a woman's constitutional right to abortion. In Missouri, however, a parental consent requirement was upheld.

Both the Massachusetts and the Missouri cases are now before the United States Supreme Court, with the present term to end in a few weeks.

Considering the timing, some regard the State Assembly's June 10th passage of the bill as an election year device and the measure itself, as the ultimate "motherhood bill."

"When we're all about to hear the law of the land from the Supreme Court it was particularly irresponsible to rush into this," said Barbara Shack, legislative director for the New York City Civil Liberties Union. "It's a charade."

Others question the bill's intent. They view it as an attempt to chip away at the state abortion law, rather than to protect minors' rights, as supporters, notably Right to Life and church groups, contend.

"We would love to stop abortion, but this is not an anti-abortion bill," insisted Jeanne Head, chairman of Manhattan Right to Life. "Our grave concern in this bill is for teen-agers."

Without a parent's guidance, she said, a pregnant teen-ager may be subjected to "tremendous pressures" to choose abortion and "led to believe that the procedure is so safe and so simple."

"That's not true," said Miss Head, a gynecological nurse in a New York City hospital. "I know of a 16-year-old girl who had to have a hysterectomy after an abortion because her uterus was perforated."

As for statistics indicating that childbirth is more dangerous, for than early abortion, Miss

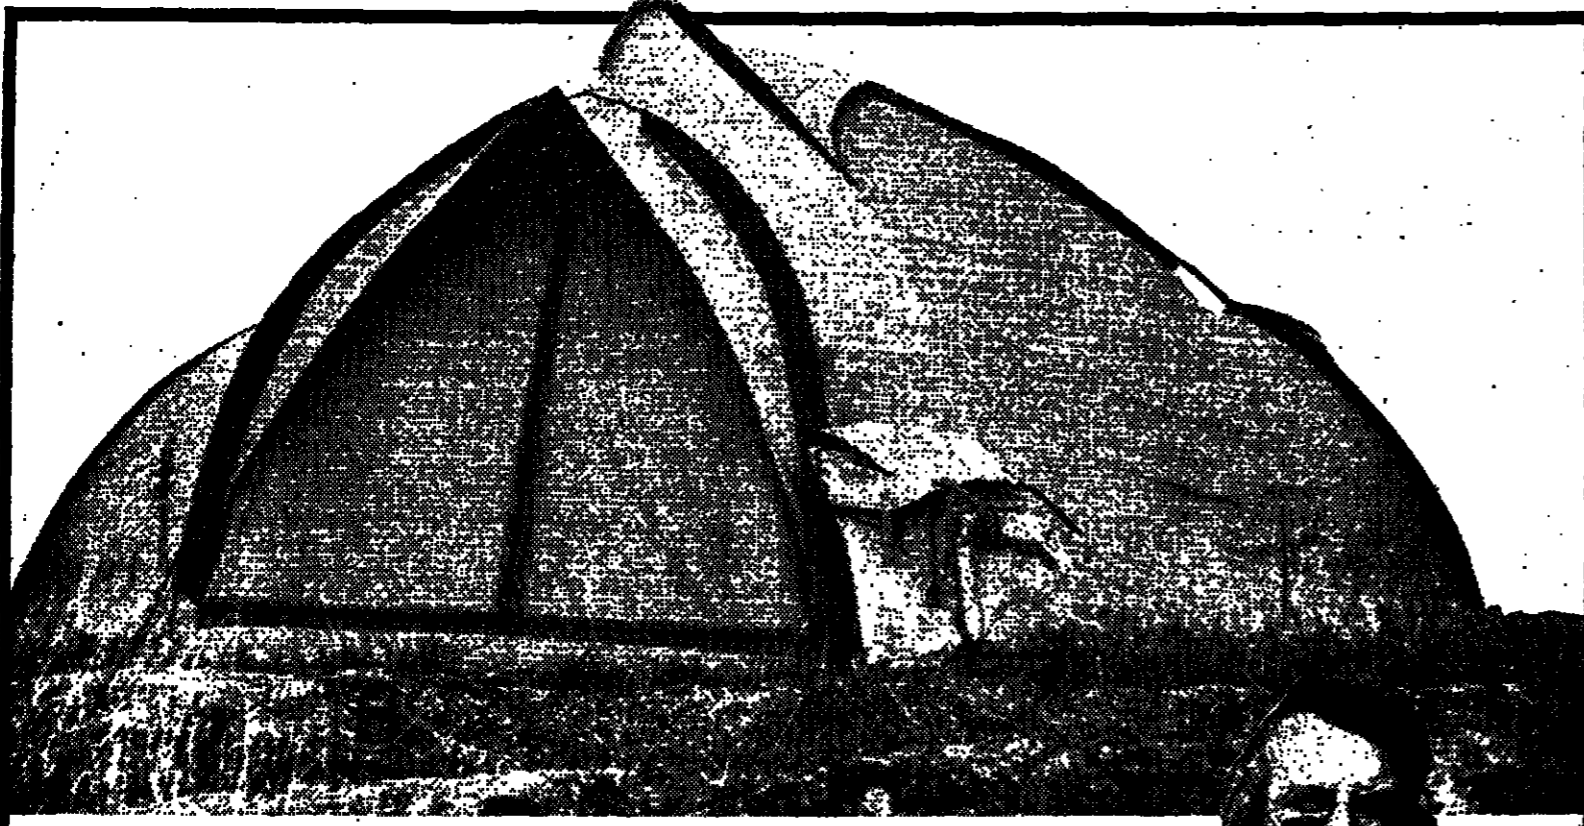

"You can talk about per cent for that girl who has lost her capacity it's 100 percent

For its part, Planned Parenthood maintains that there has been a single case of "serious" young woman because of a trimester abortion since it took effect in 1970. It further that, "to the best of our knowledge, there has not been a single case of a licensed clinic, doctor for performing an abortion without her parents' permission."

"We haven't disregarded rights," Mr. Moran said. "We've encouraged teen-agers to tell their parents. We think it's the family relationship that's the key."

When a pregnant teen-ager can't face her parents, Planned Parenthood argues that it should deny her access to fetal petent sources of help.

"You know, we see a parents here," Mr. Moran said. "They tell us they don't have teen-ager's sexual activity, tell us they are glad we if this bill becomes law, there for those teen-agers."

A-Tenting We'll Go, Ever So Beautifully

By NORMA SKURKA

The Eave Force XV looks like an insect cocoon. The Wing Tent resembles a mosquito poised for flight. Trillium could be the shell of nesting ants. All three are tents—the creation of an artist-turned-tentmaker, C. William Moss.

The lightweight structures that he designs and manufactures in an old mill on the Meganticook River in Camden, Me., attract the elite of the mountaineering and backpacking crowd, whose numbers are growing yearly: There are currently about six-million Americans who take to the trails for on-the-backpack camping, according to Backpacker Magazine.

The serious camper's interest in a Moss tent is not directed toward their organic good looks, however. It is for their superb engineering, strength and ease of erection. It is almost accidental that the tents have an affinity with nature. Mr. Moss simply credits their beautiful form to functional design.

Mr. Moss began his small factory, Ten Works Inc., in April, 1976, and his reputation for good tents has spread by word of mouth. There are only three models and his production is low—he has produced fewer than 400 tents so far this year. And his prices are higher than most, by about 10 percent. But they are not for everybody.

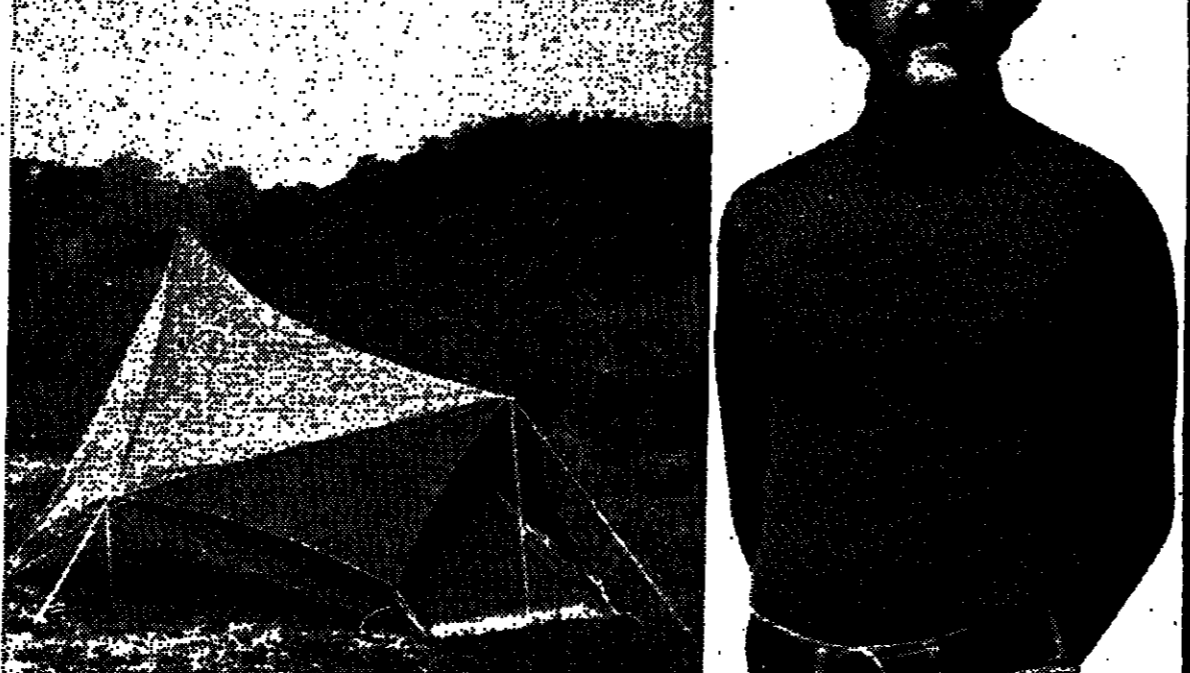

"The average camping family wouldn't need all that engineering," he said.

Eave Force XV, for instance, is aerodynamically designed to withstand 50 mile per hour winds common above the timberline. "It weighs 4 pounds 14 ounces," Mr. Moss said, "and it is designed for the mountaineer who would cut off the end of his toothbrush to save an ounce of weight."

It is free-standing, without the need of a center pole, and is held down by end flaps that can be piled with earth or snow rather than by stakes. It sleeps two and costs $160.

The Wing Tent is also exceptionally light in weight. It was originally designed for long distance cycling trips and weighs 4 pounds 3 ounces, complete with poles; it has an optional handlebar pack. The two-sleeper unit costs $125.

Trillium, the largest of the three models, "is simply the only six-man tent you can get that weighs under 13 pounds," Mr. Moss said. It is supported by vaulting aluminum poles and has a free span inside with three separate bays that each sleep two. It costs $350.

Further information about the tents can be obtained by writing to Tent Works, Camden, Me. 04843.

Mr. Moss's insistence on lightweight design is at the heart of his fascination with tents, or, as he calls them, prestressed membrane structures.

"I like to make big things out of little things," he said. Typical of his approach is the disaster shelter he designed that can be dropped from an airplane and opened on the ground like a parachute to span 20 feet. He also developed a molded fiberglass structure called the O-Dome that was an instant vacation house meant to sell for $5,000 but whose price has since risen to $8,000.

He is best known for the "Pop Tent" developed in 1956 for the Ford Motor Company, which was a best seller. Another of his large tensile structures served as a 900-seat theater pavilion, commissioned by the Smithsonian Institution in Washington in 1968.

Instant shelter to solve the world's housing shortage has been his life-time goal. He may even see a step in that direction soon.

He is building the prototype of a prefabricated housing system for a Middle Eastern country. The system is essentially an interlocking tent structure that is then sprayed over with a chemical foam that later becomes rigid to form a house shell.

"First and foremost, Mr. Moss considers himself an artist, and his structures, including the tents, are his art forms."

"I never enjoyed seeing my paintings on a gallery wall," he said. "I get a kick out of designing something, then watching people produce it, and ultimately, seeing them living in it."

Bicentennial Jewelry Meets To Last Another 200 Years

By BERNADINE MORRIS

The Bicentennial theme has penetrated fashion in a number of ways, producing a rash of flag colors and a tendency to look to work clothes, such as lumbermen's jackets, and hunter's and fishermen's gear, as the source of styles for less strenuous activities.

Bulgari, the Rome jewelers with New York headquarters in the Pierre Hotel, has approached the theme with high seriousness.

"It would be so easy to be corny," explained Nicola Bulgari, the family member who is in charge of the New York office. "But we don't encourage people to buy our jewelry for a season just to be topical. We want it to last, possibly forever."

For the Smithsonian?

To insure longevity, the Bulgari insisted on giving each piece historical value. It is their hope that some purchasers will present a few to the Smithsonian Institution.

The collection was introduced at the party for the Special Olympics sponsored recently by the Kennedy family. Some pieces were on display; others were worn by the mannequins showing Valentino clothes, thereby constituting something of an Italian salute to the United States.

Flag colors and, indeed, flags themselves turn up frequently, but not necessarily your ordinary stars and stripes. Bulgari has, for instance, reproduced in enamel the flags of the original thirteen states and strung them on a necklace, separated by diamond-studded stars.

The same flags are etched around a silver tureen, which is among the table pieces the company has produced. Flags from 1776 and 1876 decorate a silver beaker, and a box that can be used for cigarettes is engraved with a map of the United States, the date each state was admitted to the union, and the nation's first flag in one corner, and the present one in another. This is one of the pieces Mr. Bulgari feels is worthy of the Smithsonian.

A Necklace of Coins

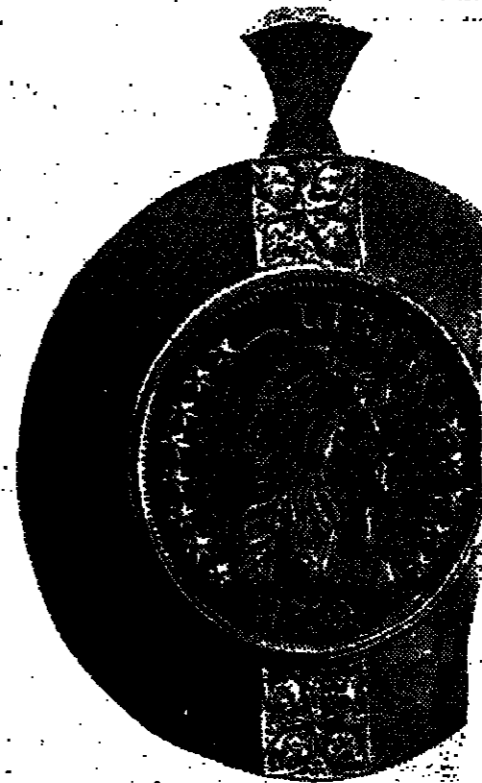

Flag designs in jewelry are worked out in coral, lapis and diamonds or rubies, sapphires and diamonds, but the subtlest form of Bicentennial jewelry involves old coins.

The company has extended its tradition of using Roman or Greek coins as the focal point, say, of a necklace, to include early American ones. Hence, a penny bearing George Washington's likeness, minted in 1791; a 50-cent piece bearing a Liberty head design, dated 1803, and the first coin known to be minted in this country, the Massachusetts pine-tree shilling, of 1652, have been incorporated in various jewelry pieces.

"I'm a coin collector myself, but I never knew there were such interesting American ones before we started this project," Mr. Bulgari observed. "You can learn a lot of history this way."

The Bicentennial theme was invoked obliquely when the Corduroy Council of America sponsored a fashion show abroad the steamship Robert Fulton at the South Street Seaport.

The collection of clothes in corduroy by students from the Parsons School of Design included a series of nautical designs linked to Operation S.S., the parade of sailing ships that will come to New York harbor on July 4. Another group showed the use of corduroy for seasonless styles and a third stressed innovative designs.

The winner of the prize for the best nautical fashion was Michelle Hollingsworth, 23, who was named Designer of the Year at Parsons. She designed a hooded yellow duffle coat with white pinwaile pants.

It wasn't the first prize Miss Hollingsworth picked up in her school career. Her list includes awards from Kasper and Leo Narducci at Parsons, one of the "Next Great American Designers" awards from the International Ladies Garment Workers Union and a prize for a handbag in a contest sponsored by Waldborg-Coblentz.

Vinoba Bhave, considered by many to be the spiritual heir of Mohandas K. Mr. Bhave, who promised to begin his fast on Sept. 11, his 81st birthday, said that publication of his announcement had been proscribed by the Government and asked that village leaders spread the word. U.S. BARS TROOPS FOR PHILADELPHIA

Aide Says City Will Look to Guard and Police on July 4

WASHINGTON, June 21 (AP)—Philadelphia was turned down today on its request for Federal troops for the July 4 celebration.

The city's Deputy Mayor, Albert Gaudiosi, said that Philadelphia probably would ask for state National Guard troops now that its request for 15,000 Federal combat soldiers was rejected by Harold Tyler, Deputy Attorney General. The city is seeking the troops to aid in crowd control and to handle any demonstrations July 4.

Mr. Gaudiosi came out of a meeting with Mr. Tyler, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Pennsylvania state and other city officials to report Mr. Tyler's decision.

He said that Mr. Tyler had told the meeting he could not commit troops unless "pitched warfare raged in the city of Philadelphia beyond the control of police and National Guard."

"If that is the yardstick, we'll have to wait until the Fourth of July," Mr. Gaudiosi said.

He said that the F.B.I.'s Philadelphia bureau chief, Neil Welch, was at the session and had told Mr. Tyler that the city could expect at least 11,600 demonstrators from two groups. They were identified as the Rich Off Our Backs, and the July 4th Coalition. Mr. Welch based his information on the number of charter buses that had been reserved in such cities as Cincinnati and New York to carry the demonstrators here. A spokesman for the Justice Department confirmed Mr. Gaudiosi's account, saying that Mr. Tyler had reacted the only way he could because that "is the way the law is written." He added, "Congress said you can't have a national police force."

Mr. Gaudiosi said that his next step would be to meet with Mayor Frank L. Rizzo, and that it was more than likely the state's National Guard would be requested. The state has a pool of 4,000 riot-trained guardsmen who could be called to active duty, and the city has a police force of 8,000.

If Federal troops were needed, Mr. Gaudiosi said that Mr. Tyler had mentioned a brigade at Fort Bragg, N. C., that could be committed, but he said it would take 40 hours for the troops to be airlifted to the city.

By that time, Mr. Gaudiosi said, the "horse will be out of the barn." He added that he was expecting at least one million visitors to the city's historic area.

The keystone of the city's July 4 observance will be a program at Independence Hall in the morning featuring a speech by President Ford and a seven-hour parade later in the day.

 that it usually means a horse is dead to be sidelined for four weeks.
 "Remember, once the coughed gets back on his feet — and food — it takes about two weeks to get him so he can get back to his normal. Right now we're nursing through the usual cycle with some horses sick, coming down with the strain and others recovering."
 The bug has hit some stables harder than others. Larry Barrows, who has 30 horses at Belmont, said yesterday that 27 of his 30 horses were ill. In contrast, Steve DiMauro, who trains Deary Precious and the Meadow Stable string, said only three of his 40 horses were afflicted.
 "That I hate to give out numbers," DiMauro added with a smile, "I don't want to flux myself."
 The flu is easy for a horse to pass on to other horses, Gilman explained. "Those paddocks are continually being walked past stalls occupied by others. The disease is airborne. All that a horse in the stall has to do is cough a few times and the chances are the passerby will become infected too if they are susceptible."
 Trotter said he was convinced that New York racing was in no danger of being stopped.
 "The cycle is what will make the difference," he concluded. "We may get some more sick ones simply because horses are being continually shipped in. But, by a similar token, horses are recovering. Laz [Barrows] had one [Root Cause] under training today who had finished with his convalescence. We think the worst is over."

Forage, right, Jacinto Vasquez up, winning the feature race at Belmont yesterday. Dancing Gun, Angel Cordero in the irons, came in second. Lee Gary was third.

SCHOOLS PUSHING 3 R'S IN NEW YORK

 stripped of virtually every kind of academic "enrichment" from music instruction to math labs to team sports and trips to museums. For 15 years we have been talking about extra programs, curriculum revision, and special services," said Mr. Alvarez. "Now all we think about is 32 kids in a classroom."
 For the able and well-motivated student, such as those aspiring to the competitive high schools like Bronx Science, New York City schools probably offer resources unmatched by any other urban area. Educators fear, however, that for tens of thousands of children whose parents are unable to pay for whom a basketball program or a violin teacher provides the motivation to take school seriously, the cutting out of so-called "frills" has done irreparable damage.
 "Our library is no longer a place to hear stories; it's a place to get books," said Rene Zekind, a reading resource teacher at P.S. 156 in the Bedford Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn. "They have cut out everything that makes school enjoyable."
 No two educators will agree on what constitutes academic quality, and little is known for certain about the elements that contribute to it. Recent reports of thousands of students who voluntarily associated with good instruction, such as small "class size" affect individuals' "students in different ways."
 An Innovative Past
 In the 1930's and 1940's, with the advantages of a stable student population and large numbers of talented teachers who in more overworked times might have entered the profession, New York City schools were considered the best in the country. They pioneered in techniques of individualized instruction, and their curricula were widely emulated.
 There are still areas in which New York City schools are national leaders, such as the special education and vocational education, but as a system it no longer carries its earlier reputation for excellence.
 One major reason is that, as school Chancellor James A. Stewart pointed out in a recent interview, "people tend to judge schools by who goes to them." And city schools are now largely populated by high school and college-bound students whose backgrounds pose obstacles to learning.
 Fifty-nine percent of New York City schoolchildren are eligible for "federally free-lunch programs" (versus 24 percent for the country as a whole). Robert G. Frerking, principal of P.S. 156, rue, said that the school is up against a "100 percent student turnover" in the course of every year.
 The Suburban Comparison
 Figures from the Board of Education show that two-thirds of New York students are reading below grade level, which is better than Cincinnati (74 percent), Atlanta (73) and Baltimore (70) but not as good as Detroit or Cleveland (61 percent). What concerns Board of Education leaders, however, is that city scores are considerably lower than those of nearby suburban areas.
 "People aren't going to move to Chicago," said Mr. Anker. "They do move to Great Neck."
 Figures from the State Education Department show that on the basis of state-administered Pupil Achievement Tests students from New York City and, for that matter, other large cities — consistently achieve lower scores, on the average, than those from "village-suburban" (non-urban) areas.
 On sixth-grade reading tests for 1974, for example, 50 percent of New York City students were at or above the statewide norm, as opposed to 81 percent in the suburban areas.
 The problems inherent in being a big city school system have been exacerbated by what Mr. Anker calls the "unholy" cuts of the last year. The effective instruction budget this year is $270 million short of what officials say would be necessary to maintain last year's teaching positions, or one of five were eliminated through a series of cuts running from September to January.
 Schools have responded to the cuts by cutting back on resources where available into basic subjects like reading and arithmetic. This would seem to be the major reason why, on

Budget Cuts Hurt Special Education

By DAVID VIDAL
 The efforts of the New York City school system to accommodate a rapidly increasing enrollment of handicapped pupils in special-education programs have been significantly hampered by the fiscal crisis.
 After a five-year growth period in which the special education budget rose to $21 million from $110 million, funds for these programs, which enroll some of these students most in need of educational services, were sharply cut by $39 million.
 The cutsback came in the face of a 51 percent increase in enrollment of handicapped students — from 27,885 in 1970 to 39,553 in 1975—and the passage of new state and Federal regulations that will require more spending in the city.
 Commissioner of Education, Ewald B. Nyquist, ordered the "immediate" and "appropriate" placement of all handicapped pupils requesting it.
 Cuts of $21 million more have been proposed for the coming school year—when an additional 8,000 pupils were to be placed—while the system's Division of Special Education and Pupil Personnel Services absorbs the impact of the loss of 1,050 of its teachers and a third of its paraprofessionals, who were dropped during the year.
 "Noncompliance With Law"
 Of particular concern to division officials are the recent cases in the State Education Department of Child Guidance, which handles much of the crucial referrals of brain-injured, emotionally disturbed, hearing- or speech-impaired and other physically handicapped pupils for special programs. At the same time, the city's Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation Services, which also handled many referrals, has said that it is eliminating its contribution to that area.

 "That epitomizes our situation," said the executive director of the division, Dr. Helen M. Fuhrer.
 An aide added that, because of the money troubles, "technically, we are in non-compliance with the law."
 The adverse impact of the cuts, which have also forced a large staff turnover, is in evidence throughout the schools, because special education is a central rather than a district program.
 "We had three teachers for 15 'brain-injured' kids. Now we have two teachers for 15 children, and we are no longer testing retarded children," said Joan M. Kenny, superintendent of District 10 in the Bronx.
 "Throughout the school system, there has been an increasing tendency to place untrained teachers in special-education positions."
 A "Horrible Situation"
 "At one point we were under pressure to accept a gardening specialist with seniority for a special-education position, but we resisted," an official of the budget office said, adding, "It had gotten that bad."
 Supervisors and industrial arts teachers with seniority have also found themselves in enlarged classes for handicapped pupils, leading to what one superintendent termed a "horrible" situation. The Division of Special Education and Pupil Personnel Services consists of nine bureaus, six of which concentrate on education for a particular handicap. They conduct 40 programs that serve 39,553 full-time pupils and about 75,695 part-time pupils.

The cutsback have been felt in other ways that do not necessarily show in statistics. As a result of the "dumping" of teachers with lower seniority, many, if not most, classes have changed teachers in the course of the year, and some have had as many as eight teachers.
 "It's discouraging," said Mrs. Zekind at P.S. 156. "You see somebody come in as a baby teacher and blossom and then boom. They're out. You can't explain bumping to a child. They need time to adjust to a new teacher, and they come to me and say, 'You hate our class.' It's been a year of tears."
 The uncertainty that followed the year-end budget cuts this year—and persists in regard to possible additional "misses" next year—has played havoc with curriculum planning. "I have a faculty meeting and suggest that we form a reading committee for next year," said Sidney Young, principal of P.S. 18 in the South Bronx. "The teachers say, 'Why? Will we be here next year? I don't blame them.'"
 The loss of attendance tracers has led to increased truancy and, presumably, less educating. Joan M. Kenny, superintendent of District 10 in Queens, said that she had been getting many more truancy complaints from the local department store. "The main thing of kids seem to be learning is shopping," she declared.
 Reduction in guidance counselors has produced long lists of children waiting for psychological services and has affected the classroom atmosphere. "One disruptive child can prevent the education of 20 others," said Charles Wilson, superintendent of District 23, who lost 13 of 28 guidance counselors.
 Role of the Extracurricular
 Likewise, the elimination of extracurricular activities, while seemingly innocuous to the student, has had consequences for learning. "A lot of kids will work harder if this is what it takes to stay on the track team," said Delores Tanenbaum, a member of the District 25 board.
 Specific types of schools and students have been affected by the cuts in their own ways. P.S. 219 in Queens, for instance, opened 10 years ago as a "model" school with specially built facilities for open classrooms. "People used to be about their addresses to get their kids into this school," said Gale Yurman, president of the Parent-Teacher Association.
 Now, according to Adolph Small, the principal, team teaching activities have been "handcuffed" because "we have just enough teachers to cover each class." Students can ne-through the windows at the well-equipped woodworking shop. It has been locked up for the year. In what used to be the math lab, a set of scales gathers dust in a corner, and the Cuisenaire rods used to teach basic number theory lie unused on a table.

 "We were supposed to be the prototype of what education should be," said Mrs. Small. "But the teachers trained in our methods were the young ones seeing the last vestiges of what is good." Mrs. Yurman said that her predecessor, like several other active parents, was moving to Hicksville.
 Students with the most serious reading problems have fared relatively well this year, mainly because extra assistance for them comes from Federal Title I funds. Those with less serious problems, but still in need of help, however, have often been unable to find it. At J.H.S. 189, for example, the number of children receiving special tutoring in reading has dropped from 240 to 180.
 Effects Not All Bad
 The effects of the cutsback have not been entirely negative. Administrators privately acknowledge that they have been able to get rid of some dead wood among teachers. "We had some guidance counselors who sat around doing nothing," said one community superintendent. "At least now many teachers realize that the real work really begins in the classrooms."
 Mrs. Farmer, at P.S. 24, said that the new policy of sending students home early on Tuesdays and Fridays at least had the benefit of having all teachers free at the same time for meetings.
 Visitors to the schools are also aware that, for all the obstacles, teachers have frequently been making heroic efforts to maintain academic programs. "In many ways we are better off than we have reason to expect," said Chancellor Anker.
 Stephen Desposito, the principal of I.S. 99 in Springfield Gardens, Queens, said that, despite worries to the contrary, the schools music night was the best ever. "The teachers are doing it as a volunteer work," he said. Mrs. Farmer declared, "It's been a good year academically because we've been working very hard and made it a good year."
 Everywhere, however, teachers and others wonder whether if further cuts are forthcoming, it will still be possible to live on dedication alone.
 "Our parents are frightened about what might happen," said Mrs. Farmer. "But I'm an optimist. When you work with children you have hope. You see results and you feel rejuvenated."

At Roosevelt

In an unusual decision, Roosevelt judges yesterday suspended Bill Megens for 10 days "for driving in an indifferent manner with White Richelleu on June 4."
 Megens, a 42-year-old Canadian from the Ontario community of Jerseyville, won at Roosevelt with the same standard on May 27 and June 11 in 1:58 1/2. Sandwiched between these two efforts, however, was the race in question in which White Richelleu needed 2:01 1/2 to come home fifth. The victor was clocked in 2:00.
 "I told the judges that the decision seems to be insinuating I cheated with this horse," said Megens when reached by phone at his home in Canada. "I didn't and haven't bet a nickel on the horse since I first brought him to Roosevelt. I had all kinds of trouble problems in the race in question."

 France cited Miller for "initiating and executing a meaningful exchange of racing and breeding programs with that country since 1959."

West Point Is Re-examining Academic Procedures

 consisted of more than 800 seniors being given two weeks to complete the same examination in their barracks.
 "Officers must develop a system of values and standards; they can implement without somebody looking over their shoulders," General Berry said. "A battlefield situation is more akin to a take-home exam than it is to one given with a proctor," he said.
 Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, chairman of the Military Manpower Subcommittee, and Senator John C. Culver of Iowa, both Democrats, asked if the honor system itself was not faulty in view of the apparently widespread cheating and the seemingly imprecise definitions of lying, cheating and stealing. The implied confusion in honor code definitions sugrested by the Senators was underscored when General Berry and General Ulmer replied differently to the question: Would a cadet be guilty of toleration if he failed to report a rumor? The superintendent said no; the Commandant said yes, under some circumstances.

 The study of West Point's academic procedures, which is being conducted by four colonels from the English, social studies, mathematics and mechanical engineering departments, could touch on what appear to some observers to be major differences in approach by tactical and academic officers.
 Tactical officers, according to a Congressional expert, tend to see West Point as a training ground for military leaders grounded in discipline, while the academic officers concentrate more heavily on scholarship. The differences, according to some cadets, can be profound in terms of teaching, giving exams and handling suspected honor code violations.

A blue chip in Turkey celebrates 50 years.

A sort of case history of 56 companies and the chairman who's been in control from the start.

You may or may not know the name Koç. It is pronounced "coach" which is unusually appropriate because the founder is still in harness after 50 years, and he hand-picked the management team.

Our total consolidated assets have passed $750 million. If you'd like to know something about each of the 56 companies in the group and how they interlock and the revenues of $1.25 billion, our 50th Anniversary Report is yours for the asking. But, in brief, here are some pertinent details.

Largest shareholder

In the booming mixed economy of Turkey, the Koç Group is the largest private company; people from all walks of life hold shares in Koç. The largest shareholder, of course, is our founder, Vehbi Koç. Every year the amount he pays in income tax makes headline news.

Almost everything but shipbuilding

What does the Koç Group do? Few companies in the world are so diversified...electric cables and lamps, fruit canning, domestic appliances, computers, radio and tv sets, glass fiber, hospital supplies, furniture, credit cards, central heating, ballpoints, oil and gas, a travel agency, insurance, luxury hotels, textiles, matches, etc., etc.

But more than 50% of our activities are in the "automotive" sector...everything from cars to motorbikes to farm tractors to earth-moving equipment, plus commercial vehicles, trucks and buses.

Koç, Ford, Fiat, Siemens, General Electric

We have links with many overseas companies: those mentioned above, plus Burroughs, Uniroyal, Mobyette, Honda, etc. The combination is unusual, but it works. We have completely separate organizations within Koç with autonomous management for each. Each is fiercely competitive.

Marketing is our greatest skill

Big as we are in manufacturing, we like to think of ourselves as basically a marketing organization. We are salesmen, both in Turkey and overseas. We are also retailers.

An important step backward

Koç is now moving into "backward integration" as a further investment in the country's future. This will cut import costs and assure continuity of supply. New foundries for the casting of automotive engine blocks and agricultural machinery components are underway. And we are leading an investment of approximately $100 million in Turkey's first specialty steel plant, to service the industry as a whole. Future plans are even more ambitious.

The 16-year-old boy who began it all

Vehbi Koç started in his father's small shop in Ankara at 16. Ten years later, with a small loan from his father, he went out on his own. When Atatürk made Ankara the new capital, Koç added construction materials to his interests. His business grew with each new street that was built.

From the 1930's on, Mr. Koç noted Turkey's growing international trade and became the exclusive agent for many leading US and European companies. After the Second World War, he moved into local manufacturing in line with the nation's drive towards industrialization.

He pioneered industrial joint ventures in Turkey, with the nation's first electrical lamp factory, built in association with General Electric. Mr. Koç also set up national networks of local marketing companies to distribute his products.

The 60's saw the greatest growth in diversification and employee participation in company stock. This was also the period in which the group launched among many other firms, Turkey's first passenger car, the Anadol.

In 1968, the Vehbi Koç Foundation was set up. It is devoted to education, medicine and charities.

The team of multi-lingual managers

It had long since ceased to be a one-man show. One of Mr. Koç's greatest skills is his ability to select the best young men to manage his companies. Technology and know-how was in part imported, but the highly sophisticated Koç management of today is home-grown.

Free enterprise in Turkey

Now, of course, with a policy of going public with each new enterprise, the Koç Group is pre-eminent in the private sector of the economy. And the Koç Holding Company has a long range corporate planning department which co-ordinates group operations with Turkey's 5-Year Development Plans.

Future growth

What of the future? The Turkish market will grow and grow and grow, and for many many years, it will still be difficult for production to keep pace with demand. The need for capital, both domestic and foreign, is enormous.

In a Western-style mixed economy such as Turkey's, no company is in a better position than the Koç Group of today. It is an "institution".

The man who founded it 50 years ago, and introduced Western business methods to Turkey, controls it all by memo. The flood of ideas for new ventures, new stock issues, new export opportunities seems endless. Each memo is in Turkish, the only language Mr. Koç speaks. The vision is Turkish too...indeed, in personality the man and the country are almost one.

To the 'Coach'

All of us who make up the Koç Group salute his, and the nation's, most recent (and unprecedented) 50 years.

The Koç Group in Turkey

The nation's largest private business
• 50 years old • 56 companies • Total consolidated assets: $750 million • 1975 revenues $1.25 billion.

Iranian Oil Deal Stirs Wariness

By WILLIAM D. SMITH—Both the oil industry and Wall Street seemed to be adopting a wait-and-see attitude yesterday regarding the announcement of Iran's intention to purchase $125 million of the cumulative voting preferred stock of the Occidental Petroleum Corporation, the largest single purchase of an interest in a United States company by a Middle Eastern oil producer.

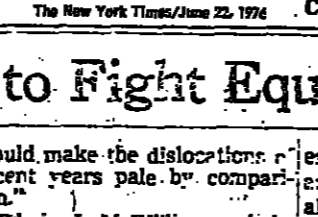

for Brown Brothers Harriman, said, "It seems like a typical Armand Hammer move. He sees a small gap of opportunity and rushes in with big plans." Mr. Hammer is the controversial chairman of Occidental.

David Mizrahi, publisher of the McGraw-Hill's "Energy" magazine, said that a probable reason for the agreement is Iran's desire to find outlets for its crude oil. Iran heavy crude oil sales have slowed considerably in the last two years, affecting the country's revenues and investment plans.

According to Joseph Baird, president of Occidental, Iran approached the company several weeks ago to begin negotiations. The Occidental delegation arrived in Teheran Wednesday and the letter of intent was signed on Sunday.

Other analysts suggest that the agreement may be a move on the part of Iran to coax the consortium of Western oil companies that operate the Iranian industry to come to terms on increasing their sales of crude oil and reinvesting in Iran. The companies and Iran have been negotiating over these matters for several months.

On a purely practical basis, Iran and Occidental would seem to have something to offer each other. Some energy analysts believe that Occidental is an underpriced stock and that Merz Peters, energy expert.

MAY ORDERS ROSE 1.4% IN DURABLES

Rate of Capacity Utilization Up Strongly in Quarter—Backlog Increase Big

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr. Special to The New York Times—WASHINGTON, June 21—New orders for durable goods rose strongly in May, and the rate of capacity utilization in manufacturing increased significantly in the first quarter, separate Commerce Department reports disclosed today.

The increase in new orders was nearly $2 billion, or 4.1 percent, to $49.82 billion. With orders exceeding shipments, there was the first large increase in the backlog of unfilled orders since September 1974.

The backlog had declined for 17 consecutive months until it leveled in March and April of this year. Then in May the backlog rose by $1.4 billion to $138.4 billion.

The sign of some rise in the pressure on the nation's manufacturing capacity was reinforced by the report on capacity utilization. The Commerce Department has developed its own measure in this area, which differs in some respects from that of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve is in the process of revising its own series.

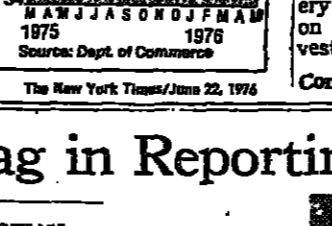

The Commerce Department measure showed that manufacturing industry operated on the average at 82 percent of capacity in March, up from 79 percent in December. The recession low was 75 percent in March and June of last year, and the recent peak was 86 percent in March and June of 1973.

Thus capacity utilization has moved more than half way back from the recession level to the boom level of 1973. Possible shortages and "bottlenecks" in supplies of some kinds of products are cited by those analysts who fear a renewed worsening of inflation. Today's figures were not conclusive on that issue, which is in dispute among the experts, but they did indicate that the "slack" in the economy is on the way to disappearing.

The highest rates of utilization in March were in the motor vehicles and petroleum industries, at 98 percent and 94 percent respectively. Primary metals, which includes steel, rose strongly from December but still showed a utilization rate of only 78 percent.

However, today's report on new orders in May said there was one of the largest rises in the last 10 years in order backlogs in the primary metals industries.

The northeastern banking commissioners contend, however, that the interest rate differential has little impact on housing. They have also expressed the opinion that a massive shift of funds will occur from commercial banks into savings institutions, now that savings institutions in most northeastern states have the power to offer checking accounts to their customers.

The Savings Association League of New York State said yesterday that it had sent a letter to each of the northeastern banking commissioners protesting their decision to lobby for what we have been doing for at least the last two years, Elliott said in a statement issued from the company's Miami headquarters.

Mr. Elliott said that the company was not admitting wrongdoing and that it had signed the agreement only to avoid years of litigation. The commission had accused Levitz with, among other things, misrepresenting the number of items for which prices were reduced, the amount of reductions, and the reasons for the reductions; claiming "sale" prices that were, in fact, the usual selling prices; misrepresenting construction and material composition of furniture.

The company also was charged with failing to make good on furniture delivered in damaged or defective condition and with failing to disclose all what we have been doing for at least the last two years, Elliott said in a statement issued from the company's Miami headquarters.

Comptroller Quits In a Surprise Move

By TERRY ROBARDS—President Ford announced yesterday that he had accepted the resignation of James E. Smith as Comptroller of the Currency, one of the nation's key bank-regulatory positions.

Comptroller's salary is about $43,000 a year. A spokesman said he had two daughters, 9 and 13 years old. The disclosure of the resignation, which President Ford accepted "with deep regret," surprised bankers in New York. In general, the banking industry felt that Mr. Smith had been appointed and confirmed. President Ford's announcement said no successor had been named.

Mr. Smith could not be reached for comment. Speculation arose in the banking community that the Comptroller would seek, or had been offered, a position in private industry, where salaries can be

O.E.C.D. Approves Rules of Conduct For Multinationals

PARIS, June 21 (Reuters)—The 24 member countries of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development agreed today on a voluntary code of conduct for multinational companies, the O.E.C.D. said.

The code, formally adopted at the O.E.C.D. ministerial meeting here, lays down the responsibilities governments think companies should accept. Governments are asked to treat the multinationals as far as possible on the same basis as local companies.

The 19-page text, already circulated among companies and trade unions in member countries, urged greater disclosure of information even if not required by local law. This includes the publication of financial statements at least once a year in each of the countries in which a multinational operates.

The companies are called on to report their shareholdings, sources and uses of funds, significant new capital investment by geographical area, operating results and sales by geographical area, and research and development spending for the enterprise as a whole.

Savings Units to Fight Equal-Rate Plan

The efforts of the commercial banking industry and of state banking commissioners in the Northeast to abolish savings rate differentials in the region will be strenuously opposed, officials of the thrift industry said yesterday.

The Savings Association League of New York State said any such efforts would be "ill-conceived and destructive" and might "force our economy into an inflationary spiral which would make the dislocations of recent years pale by comparison." Edwin J. McWilliams, chairman of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, said, "There is no justification for such a piecemeal approach." He said the issue should be resolved within the context of financial reform legislation on a broad national basis.

Two weeks ago, the banking commissioners of seven northeastern states met in Boston and agreed to ask Congressional leaders to consider abolishing the federally mandated Regulation Q, which permits thrift institutions to pay one-quarter of a point more in interest rates than commercial banks can pay on time deposits.

The interest rate differential exists to assure a flow of funds into thrift institutions and thus into housing finance. Savings institutions are the traditional sources of mortgage loans.

Little Impact Seen—The northeastern banking commissioners contend, however, that the interest rate differential has little impact on housing. They have also expressed the opinion that a massive shift of funds will occur from commercial banks into savings institutions, now that savings institutions in most northeastern states have the power to offer checking accounts to their customers.

The Savings Association League of New York State said yesterday that it had sent a letter to each of the northeastern banking commissioners protesting their decision to lobby for

F.P.C. Cites Lag in Reporting Natural Gas Reserves

WASHINGTON, June 21—A Federal Power Commission staff report said today that producers of natural gas and the American Gas Association sometimes makes generous estimates of newly discovered gas reserves.

The staff stated this finding in a report on its attempts to reconcile a large disparity between the association's estimates of offshore Louisiana discoveries in 1971-72 of 3.15 trillion cubic feet and an F.P.C. staff estimate of 4.85 trillion.

The staff estimate was based on producers' data filed with the agency. However, a more important explanation, accounting for 1.3 trillion cubic feet of the disparity of 1.7 trillion, was a lag in association reporting of newly discovered gas.

Campaign on Prices—That difference appeared on its face to support the suspicions of those who contend that the association has been understating reserves as part of its campaign to win higher prices from the commission and deregulation from Congress.

The association publishes once a year the country's only estimate of total gas reserves. This figure is aggregated from subcommittee estimates for various fields, estimates that are developed from raw data, such as depth and gas flow, provided by producers.

Distinguishing the estimates themselves from the lag in reporting them, the staff said "the estimates in total are reasonable." Having identified the figures, including those reported for later years, for 1971-72 offshore Louisiana discoveries, the staff added them. The association total was 4.2 trillion cubic feet, the producers' own data came to 4 trillion and the staff estimated 3.1 trillion.

The Plus in Gulf+Western

For fiscal 1975, Gulf+Western Industries, Inc. increased its earnings by 39%. Thus, its compounded earnings growth rate over the previous five years rose to 26%. Fully diluted, 1975 per share earnings increased 37%, and the first nine months of fiscal 1976 added a further 16%. Concurrently, G+W significantly reduced its long-term debt while increasing stockholders' equity.

What are the prospects for the continuation of such success? The latest of five reports on this major multinational company by our Corporate Finance Department addresses that question in unusual detail. It discusses the character of nine G+W operating groups, their expected contribution to future profits, and their mix of consumer and industrial products. It describes the organization's capability for re-deploying marketing resources, thus achieving wider profit margins and, in many cases, dominant competitive position.

In addition, our 32-page report contains a financial overview which illustrates the company's continuing success with its multi-security capitalization.

This is a penetrating, comprehensive report, rewarding to the institutional and individual investor. It examines the calculation of fully diluted earnings and discusses why, in our opinion, the common stock of G+W may well be under-valued in today's market.

Market Place

Trading in the Options Market

By ROBERT METZ

When the Chicago Board Options Exchange set up operations almost three years ago, there was concern in some circles that the advent of a listed option market would be the undoing of many individual investors.

Options exchanges trade calls, which permit the purchase of 100 shares of a particular stock at a set exercise price within a stipulated period.

The call purchaser buys in anticipation of a rise in the value of the underlying shares. If the underlying shares do go up, the value of his call rises, and by a larger percentage than the shares themselves. Such leverage can lead to quick and substantial profits.

The call market is speculative. When shares do not go up, call purchasers can lose their entire investment—unless they resell their calls while there is still time for the underlying shares to advance.

Many individuals have in fact lost their investments. However, the sums involved are relatively small for the most part. Some calls cost as little as $50. Most calls involve investments of no more than a few hundred dollars.

Losses, then, can be held to acceptable levels for the prudent, and no one is seriously suggesting that the purchase of calls by individuals be restricted.

On the other hand, it was widely believed from the beginning of the options exchanges that the "safe" way to use the market was in hedging transactions. Instead of buying a call, the investor could write (sell) a call to someone else—against shares held in the seller's own portfolio of stocks.

Thus the investor could protect himself against losses in his underlying shares to a degree at least through "premiums" received by giving the call buyers the right to claim his stocks at the exercise price.

Here is an example: An individual with 100 shares of X priced at 20 writes a three-month call against the shares and receives a premium from the buyer of $200.

He is now protected against a decline of 2 points in his underlying shares—less commission costs, of course. If the stock goes the other way, rising enough to cause the option owner to call the stock, the individual loses his shares and the profit he might have earned if he had not written the call.

In relatively stable shares, call writing has offered, at times, an extra source of income.

But a number of investors have discovered that the conservative approach to investing in the listed option market has its shortcomings. If the premiums are too small, the investor may find that he is spending too much money on commissions to justify the operation.

One investor with a portfolio of conservative stocks reports that his broker convinced him that he should sell his holdings and buy volatile stocks so that he would receive larger premiums and make more money.

One result was that he began losing his shares to call owners and his commission charges soared. He also found that the premiums were ordinary income for tax purposes while his rising market losses were capital losses.

Under the rules, most of the call writer's capital losses had to be carried forward to later tax years, while his exposure to income taxes was rising as a result of his premiums.

Representative Abner Milva, Democrat of Illinois, has filed a bill to change the law so that call premiums will receive capital rather than ordinary-income treatment and will thus be an offset to capital losses. But even if his bill is enacted, there is still danger for the eager call writer in accepting too small a premium.

Paul Sarnoff, vice president for options at Herzog & Company, a brokerage firm, has prepared a table suggesting the premiums call writers should seek for various periods before they make commitments. The table reflects average volatility for underlying shares. Thus the investor seeking premiums on stocks such as A.T.&T., which is relatively stable, might accept somewhat smaller premiums. Those seeking premiums on volatile stocks such as Syntex should seek larger premiums. Expert guidance is worth seeking in cases of doubt.

Most Contracts Rise Daily Limit—Corn Also Gains

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

Soybeans, which have been retreating in price recently, moved up yesterday, with a result that most contracts closed up the 20-cents-a-bushel daily limit on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Customers of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith bought about three million bushels of soybeans in terms of futures contracts early yesterday.

Corn futures attracted some strength from the beans and July corn gained almost 10 cents a bushel to close at $2.99 1/2.

Some strength in corn prices also might be attributed to buying ahead of the weekly export inspection figures released after the close of trading.

Cotton futures jumped the limit of 2 cents a pound, with the July delivery ending at 72.20, up from 75.20 on the

Drop in Rates Aids U.S. and U.S. Steel

The securities will carry a 5 1/2 percent interest rate and a price of 100 percent of their face value. They will be convertible into common stock at a price equal to 62 1/2 a share, or 12.8 percent above the closing price of the stock on the New York Stock Exchange. Last week, there was some expectation in Wall Street that the interest rate might be set as high as 6 percent and that the premium might be set no higher than 12 percent.

The credit markets generally moved toward higher prices and lower interest rates yesterday as the consensus became more solidly entrenched that the Federal Reserve is now committed to a stable monetary posture.

As the Goldsmith-Nagan Bond and Money Market Letter suggested yesterday: "The bond and money market can pretty much count on the current calm to continue for another month at least."

It is difficult, the letter said, to see how the money supply's growth can prompt another tightening move by the Federal Reserve before the middle of July. "There is even some chance now that this pleasant period can last through the summer," it added.

The 12-man Open Market Committee of the Federal Reserve — the body that sets monetary policy each month — is scheduled to meet today in Washington.

According to the reasoning of Salomon Brothers, the committee will have "considerable leeway" in developing monetary strategy for the period immediately ahead.

Aside from the Treasury's sale of notes and bills and the pricing of U.S. Steel's $400 million of convertible debentures, the new-issue markets were quiet yesterday.

The Jersey Central Power and Light Company sold $35 million of 30-year bonds, rated Baa by Moody's and BBB- by Standard & Poor's, that investment bankers priced to yield 9.80 percent. At the end of the day, the underwriters estimated that about two-thirds of the bonds had been sold.

A group headed by Blyth Eastman Dillon won the bonds by making a bid that resulted in a cost to the company of about 9.92 percent. The securities were offered as 9 1/2's at 99.513 to produce their 9.80 percent yield.

ending June 30 would run well ahead of the previous year.

National Chemsearch, receiving some favorable comment in a financial publication, rose 1 1/4 to 23.

The volume leader was Occidental Petroleum, which moved ahead a point to 17 1/2. This followed the announcement that Iran plans to invest $125 million in "Oxy" preferred stock and warrants as part of a joint participation in developing Caspian Sea oil.

Turnover on the New York Stock Exchange amounted to 18.93 billion shares, compared with Friday's volume of 25.72 billion shares.

Nationwide trading in all issues listed on the Big Board dipped to 22.11 billion shares from 29.71 million shares.

Trading Remains High

Despite the decline in turnover, trading activity remained high enough to send brokerage stocks ahead. Meanwhile, prominent among the few losing groups were the gold issues. Stock prices began to improve in early afternoon as about the same time that the Commerce Department announced a 4.1 percent gain during May in new factor orders for durable goods. This contrasted with a nominal decline in April.

Time Inc. rose 2 points to 61 after management settled a 20-day strike with the American Newspaper Guild. After the close of trading on the Big Board, Time also disclosed plans to invest in motion pictures to be produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Columbia Pictures added 1/4 to 5 1/4.

Taft Broadcasting, up 3/4 to 32 1/4, said it expected profits in the June quarter to run well ahead of last year's results.

The Union Corporation dropped a point to 9 1/4 in active trading. It rose 1 1/2 points on Friday, after the company said it had won approval from the Food and Drug Administration to sell its soft contact lens.

Commodity Officials List Default Actions

The two officials most prominently involved in trying to untangle the confusion surrounding last month's massive default on potato futures explain to a Senate subcommittee yesterday what they are doing.

William T. Bagley, chairman of the Commodities Future Trading Commission, told the Senate Subcommittee on Agricultural Production, Marketing and Price Stabilization that his commission would re-evaluate exchange rules and enforcement programs and study its own oversight responsibilities in similar situations.

But he emphasized that these defaults of about $5 million in the potato contracts approximate one one-hundredth of total annual transaction volume.

For his part Richard E. Levine, president of the New York Mercantile Exchange, explained the settlement which will give each contract holder a premium of $880 over the final price, and said that the number of defaults had been raised to 1,000 because of the discovery that three contracts of potatoes did not meet inspection standards.

The chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Rodrick M. Hills, had a busy day opposing legislation before the Senate Commerce Committee yesterday.

the morning, Mr. Hills objected to a proposal by Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, that Federal chartering of corporations be established to tighten controls.

"The point is that we do not need new Federal behavioral standards," Mr. Hills testified. "Rather we need a more effective reporting system so that directors will be aware of conduct that is clearly incorrect by existing standards."

He also restated the S.E.C.'s support for adding more outside directors to corporate boards but suggested that, to serve responsibly on a major corporate board, an outside director would have to be paid $15,000 a year.

In the afternoon, Mr. Hills testified that a Ford Administration proposal for disclosure of improper payments may duplicate existing S.E.C. policies.

of Accountants, would give banks "a strong incentive not to work out problems with borrowers, but merely to throw them into bankruptcy with a consequent rise in unemployment."

Mr. Wriston explained that banks would also be strongly motivated to purchase only very short-term securities relatively unaffected by interest rate changes. This, he said, could seriously affect the borrowing capabilities of states and municipalities as well as many new and middle-size companies.

A former president of the Leo Burnett Company, the large Chicago advertising agency, has been appointed to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Domestic and International Business, Leonard Matthews, 54, who has been a consultant for Burnett since Jan. 1 and who has also been serving on the advisory board of President Ford's in-house campaign advertising agency, Campaign '76.

JOB CHANGES: William L. Edwards Jr., 57, will succeed Maurice R. Chambers, 59, as chairman of Interco, the diversified apparel and footwear company.

Robert H. Tullis Jr., president of the Home Insurance Company, will become chief executive officer July 1 with the retirement of John H. Washburn.

John F. Maher will return to Blyth Dillon & Company as senior vice president and director after a stint with the Great Western Financial Corporation.

Corning Net Sets Record; Other Reports Issued

By CLARE M. RECKERT
The Corning Glass Works reported yesterday record earnings for the second quarter, reflecting a sharp recovery from depressed levels a year ago.

Net income for the 12 weeks to June 13 amounted to $22.5 million, or $1.27 a share, compared with $5.2 million, or 30 cents a share, a year ago. Sales of $236.7 million were up 5 percent from $226.3 million a year ago.

The earnings were improved by strong equity earnings of associated companies. These were $6.6, compared with $1.8 million, for the 1975 period.

In addition, the company had a tax credit of $13.5 million in this year's period.

For the 24 weeks, the net income climbed to $41.5 million, or $2.35 a share, from $8.3 million, or 50 cents a share, last year. Net sales of $158.6 million were up 6 percent. The 1976 net were after a $29.8 million tax credit and also included equity earnings of $8.5 million, more than double the $3.6 million a year earlier.

The Buleva Watch Company, the nation's largest producer and importer of jeweled watches and movements, reported deficit operations in the quarter and fiscal year ended March 31. The results reflected lower demand for its consumer products and a 36 percent cut in industrial-defense business.

The loss for the quarter was $3.9 million on sales of $41.4 million, against a $1.7 million loss and sales of $48.6 million for the fourth quarter a year earlier.

For the year to March 31, the net loss was $25.6 million, after a writedown of $20.5 million, mainly for overseas inventories, plus provisions for changes in some foreign subsidiaries and domestic manufacturing operations. In the previous fiscal year, the company had a profit of $1.1 million, or 29 cents a share. Sales for the year were $204.7 million, against $228.2 million.

The company said it continued to consolidate its facilities and markets worldwide while reassigning its watch brands, price ranges and product mix with more emphasis put on both solid-state digital and electronic quartz watches.

The company said that on June 11, it was informed by the Department of Defense that its security clearance was being invalidated because of the control of over 6 per cent of its shares by foreign nationals, but that the company could continue working on all Government contracts currently in process.

Two Propose Coal Gasification Plant

The Consolidated Gas Supply Corporation and the Dravo Corporation, both of Pittsburgh, yesterday proposed to build a coal gasification demonstration plant in north-eastern Ohio at a cost of $100 million. The plan would be part of an effort by the Federal Energy Research and Development Administration to prove the feasibility of converting coal into gas for industrial use.

The two concerns, which have formed a joint venture known as the IFC Company, carry out the plans, re-submitting their proposal to the Federal agency.

A spokesman for Consolidated Gas Supply said that the Republic Steel Corporation had expressed an interest in negotiating for the purchase of the entire output of the proposed plant.

Ohio's State Energy and Resources Development Agency has taken part in the preparation of proposals. With approval, the agency could become involved in helping arrange financing for IFC and helping that company meet regulatory and environmental requirements.

The Raytheon Company of Lexington, Mass., said it had completed negotiations and signed a final contract with the Government of Saudi Arabia to provide the Middle Eastern country with a $1.035 billion anti-aircraft Hawk defense system.

Dimitri Anninos, of Traveline, Inc.

Traveline's advertising agency: Lampert Communications, Inc.

"As the largest designer of vacation tours to Greece, Traveline for years has run considerable advertising in the Sunday Times Travel section. Times readers are ideal travel prospects. They're interested in the world or they wouldn't read The Times. And they have the money to fulfill their travel desires.

"But even though The Times has been our number one medium, we rarely ran ads larger than a quarter-page. Then in February we tried a full seven-column ad in the Sunday Times Travel section. Did we get extra results! We received more than 2,800 coupons and over 200 phone calls requesting our vacation brochure. Dozens and dozens of people came to our office on the seventh floor of a midtown building.

"Such results prompted another new departure. We ran a second 2,100-line ad in the weekday Times, which we almost never use. Again results justified the extra space: 2,000 coupons and plenty of calls and visits. Incidentally, each ad produced coupons from all over the country.

Advertising On Frequency and Effectiveness

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

"Frequency is the key to memory. Frequency is the key to learning and retention," said Gene DeWitt, executive vice president and media director of Rosenfeld, Sirowitz & Lawson.

No professional advertising person would disagree. The question is how much advertising is enough? Enough to make the consumer remember a message. Enough to make his attitude toward a product more favorable.

With the help of Paula Drifman, executive vice president, research and market planning, Mr. DeWitt thinks he can now answer that question and indeed is answering it for four of the agency's more important clients.

So far the agency is only working in the area of television and the idea is simple enough—run the commercial in a market and find out just how often consumers must see it before they can readily recall it and how many times it must be seen before attitudes are altered.

That's just what it did in Columbus, Ohio; Norfolk, Va.; and Milwaukee, for a new campaign for the John Hancock Life Insurance Company. And, reports Mr. DeWitt, the tests suggested that the average person must see each spot six times in order to adequately recall it.

Now, the media man explained, the required frequency changes with the product and the competitive climate it is in.

The agency learned, for example, that a new commercial for McDonald's New York area needed to be seen 12 times before recall set in. And that, he noted, was because of all of the other McDonald's advertising people had seen as well as all of the advertising from other fast food operators.

Rosenfeld, Sirowitz & Lawson clients pay extra for the research.

"If a guy is spending $6 million on media he doesn't find it hard to spend $60,000 on research especially if you can show him he'll be spending only $5 million on media next year," said Mr. DeWitt.

And the clients don't get suspicious of the agency's recommendations, either, since the agency gets its money from fees, not media commissions.

When agencies and clients sit down to work out their broadcast advertising plans the unit they talk about is the gross rating point. One G.R.P. is one percent of all potential adult television viewers (or in radio, listeners) in a market. However, 100 G.R.P.'s doesn't mean all of the adults but the equivalent number.

They get these figures from syndicated research that estimates audience sizes for individual programs.

So, said Mr. DeWitt, to reach 50 percent of the adult viewers eight or more times

Clergyman Criticizes Religion-Tied TV Ads

The cute Xerox commercial about the monk whose productivity on a copier is deemed miraculous by his superior might have been judged "best in show" at last week's Andy Awards, but it got no votes from the friars at Graymoor Monastery.

"If that nonsense is deemed 'best in show' and 'best in TV,'" writes the Rev. James J. Gardner, director of communications, "I'd hate like hell to see the award."

"Why," he asks, "must people who commit themselves to a life of service in the church constantly be depicted as silly as, for instance, in those Xerox commercials, or the General Motors commercial about the steering committee at the convent, or Iceland's new pop singer? Religion has ceased to be cute—if it ever was cute—but the creative people haven't gotten the message."

He ends by offering to put creative people up at the monastery in Garrison, N.Y., for a couple days of indoctrination.

over a four-week period would require 200 G.R.P.'s; 75 percent eight or more times, 400 G.R.P.'s, and 90 percent, 800 G.R.P.'s. When you get up to 800 you have separated the men from the boys and the spenders from the nonspenders.

"For some clients, awareness comes after the fourth viewing, but that's the bottom," Mr. DeWitt said.

In his experience, he said, the highest frequency levels he's seen have been run by Sears preparing for a week-end sale and by political candidates ("the smart ones").

What about the creative quality of the commercials? "Frequency does ignore the subtle difference in the creative work," he responded. "Great commercials need less, and lousy ones need more, but most commercials are neither great nor lousy."

Although he doesn't have any research on other media, Mr. DeWitt believes that frequency is important in them as well, but that different media would have different values.

None of the aforementioned research applies to retail advertising in newspapers that depend for their impact on the news value of the sales information they carry.

"They're asking you to make a buying decision today, while national brand advertising seeks to create a preference," he said.

Mr. DeWitt's message to potential TV advertisers is simple enough—if you can't afford frequency don't bother advertising.

Banquet and J.W.T. Split

Banquet Foods, which makes frozen prepared foods, and J. Walter Thompson, Chicago, are ending their two-year relationship with one of those traditional mutual agreements on Sept. 1. All a question of either side wanting to use different approaches to attain the marketing goals, the official announcement reports.

Banquet, a subsidiary of RCA, reported yesterday that it had begun its search for a new agency.

Stamp of Approval

Just because soaring postal rates are pushing up the costs of magazine and direct mail advertising is no reason to believe that the United States Postal Service does not like advertising. On the contrary, it's rather fond of it. Postmaster General Benjamin Baillet told the 54th annual Conference of the Business/Professional Advertising Association at the New York Hilton yesterday how advertising had helped his gang.

For one thing advertising has managed to increase sales to stamp collectors by 45 percent, or $26 million in additional revenues, in fiscal 1975. For another, he thinks advertising has helped cut down on the Service's need for tax dollars.

In that case, let's hear it for advertising.

Iran will buy five years to buy 6.25 million shares of common stock at a share. The 6.25 million shares of common, which would pay another $125 million, would, together with preferred, give it a voting interest in Occidental of almost 50 percent.

Iran will pay for various development plans, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi wants larger revenues than the almost $1 billion Iran expects this year.

The current Iranian budget envisages a deficit of more than $2 billion. Accordingly, there was wide speculation in oil industry circles here today that Shah, who earlier met with Hammer, approved the Occidental deal largely because it would provide for Iran's burgeoning population of 35 million.

It was declared that the Government of Iran will purchase the securities for investment, [and] that it will grant a right of first refusal to Occidental in the event it decides to known for its caviar-producing sturgeon.

All told, according to an Iranian Government communiqué released here today, "the joint ventures to be studied or entered into by the parties include the exploration for and development of oil in the Caspian Sea, the transportation, processing and marketing of Iranian crude oil, participation by Occidental in cattle breeding in Iran, and participation by Iran in Occidental's real estate holdings and refineries."

The communiqué did not elaborate, but the Iranian Government is known to be eager to increase food production here to provide for Iran's burgeoning population of 35 million.

It was declared that the Government of Iran will purchase the securities for investment, [and] that it will grant a right of first refusal to Occidental in the event it decides to sell its stock," the communiqué said.

The communiqué stipulated that consummation of the deal "is subject to the approval of Occidental's board of directors and the appropriate Iranian and United States Governmental authorities; the satisfactory completion by Iran of legal, tax, financial and operational studies, and the preparation and signing of a definitive agreement before Aug. 31, 1976."

In the uncertain business climate prevailing here, Western business have been complaining of many deals dangled before them by Iranians that have simply not come off, despite marathon haggling.

It was at least two years ago that it first became known that Occidental had begun talking with the Iranian Government about looking for oil under the Caspian.

Occidental, a Los Angeles-based, diversified corporation, reported 1975 sales of $5.3 billion, largely in oil, gas and coal.

In exchange, the speculation went, Iran might give Occidental oil originating in fields in southern Iran, which are close to the Persian Gulf, and hence convenient for Western European and Japanese tankers.

The communiqué said the deal would entitle Iran to elect one member of the Occidental board, adding that Iran would have no additional Occidental stock unless offered by the company itself or as part of an agreement with the company.

MULTINATIONALS GET CONDUCT CODE

that the United States intends to negotiate a binding international agreement on corrupt practices at next month's session of the United Nations Economic and Social Council at Lima, Peru.

The United States has been taking an increasingly tough line against bribery. Bills forcing disclosure of irregular payments are being proposed in the Senate. American corporate sources said they were particularly eager to get binding international antibribery rules so that American corporations would not be put at a disadvantage in competition with foreign companies.

Although the O.E.C.D. guidelines are voluntary, they were still seen as representing considerable moral and political force.

They are "an important step for the O.E.C.D. and for international cooperation as a whole," said Papanicolaou, the Greek Minister for Economic Planning, who acted as chairman of today's ministerial session.

Intergovernmental consultation machinery has been set up to provide a forum for keeping the guidelines under review and ironing out difficulties that may arise from conflicting requirements of the individual governments.

The trade union advisory body to the O.E.C.D. expressed reservations over disclosure provisions in the code in which companies would give sales and other operational details on a regional instead of a country-by-country basis.

This point had led to some sharp arguments during the negotiating phase. Sweden led forces that wanted the tougher country-by-country disclosure.

While the United States opted for the regional formula on grounds that companies would be forced to cede too much competitive information. In the end, the American arguments carried.

Code Draws Praise

The adoption of the O.E.C.D.'s code was praised yesterday by trade groups in this country as opening the way to better relationships between multinational companies and governments of the countries in which they invest.

The United States Council of the International Chamber of Commerce said the agreement was a major move toward the eventual creation of an international system of investment principles comparable to those that prevail in the field of international trade.

The council, the United States branch of the world organization, said that it expected that the guidelines would have much support from the international business community. The membership of the council and the chamber includes a large portion of the world's multinational corporations.

Donald M. Kendall, chairman of the Emergency Committee for American Trade, said the guidelines dealt with the relations of multinational corporations and governments more comprehensively than any previous intergovernmental agreement. The committee, organized to promote freer world trade and less restriction on international investment, represents 65 major American multinational corporations.

Smith Resigns as U.S. Comptroller in Surprise Step

Continued From Page 49... Mr. Smith was criticized by members of Congress for the failure of his office to coordinate early enough to avoid the collapse of the Franklin National Bank of Long Island in 1974. This was the largest bank failure in American history.

BROKER TAX RELIEF PRESSED BY CAREY

Continued From Page 49... The stock transfer tax itself was rejected by lawyers for the Municipal Assistance Corporation, to Mr. Dyson. The lawyers said that the stock transfer tax, which forms the basis of the backing for M.A.C. bonds, could not be tampered with because of the auspices under which the bonds were purchased.

SAVINGS UNITS SET TO FIGHT ON RATES

Continued From Page 49... The regional abolition of Regulation Q... "In our judgment," the league said, "such a plan does not represent sound or responsible public policy, but rather an ill-conceived, destructive, piecemeal attempt to restructure some features of the financial community without really coming to grips with basic issues."

LYKES PASCO CUTS ORANGE JUICE PRICES

The Lykes Pasco Pack Company, a major Florida orange juice concentrate packer, said it had reduced prices by as much as 10 cents a case of 32 one-ounce cans and $1.07 a case of two dozen 16-ounce cans and a dozen 32-ounce cans, effective June 14, to reflect the continued drop in orange futures on indications of inventories may be greater than earlier. Florida officials are investigating the possibility of a reorganization of the Florida Citrus Commission.

Guild Ends Time Strike; Pact Is Like June 2 Offer

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

The strike by editorial and other employees against Time magazine and its sister publications ended yesterday, with the same contract that management offered when the employees walked out June 2.

The strikers, members of the Newspaper Guild of New York, were scheduled to return to their jobs today at the publications that were struck—Time, Sports Illustrated, People, Money and Fortune magazines and the Time-Life book division.

Despite the strike, the publications had continued to be put out on time, with contributions from most of their correspondents and writing by executives and senior editors.

Time had not mentioned the strike in its press section, but it had been noted in the "publisher's letter" on the index page in the first issue after the walkout began.

The guild had sought an increase of 18 percent over two years, but the management of Time Inc. had offered 17 percent—9 percent the first and 8 percent the second year. The settlement accepted by the union was 17 percent, but it was broken down into 9.5 percent the first year and 7.5 percent the second.

The main controversy had been over the guild's demand for an across-the-board increase. Management had insisted that it should allocate the raises, with merit as the main factor in the decision as to who should get them.

Vote Is 411 to 31

Under the two-year contract accepted by the strikers by a vote of 411 to 31 yesterday, those earning $20,000 and over a year did not qualify for the general increase. However, 90 percent of these higher-salaried employees were guaranteed increases of at least $1,000 over the two years.

The 88.6 percent of the employees who earn less than $22,000 would be assured of receiving two-thirds of the raise granted under the contract. The remaining one-third of the increase would be distributed by management to the employees on the basis of merit.

Employees are not required to join the Guild at Time Inc., and only 623 of the 1,052 editorial and miscellaneous employees there are members, a total of 59 percent. However, all 1,052 employees receive the same benefits won by the Guild.

HOSPITAL LAYOFFS REMAIN AT ISSUE

Bearne Agrees to Cut Total but Union Holds Back

By DAVID BIRD

Mayor Beame and the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation yesterday accepted the recommendations of a fact-finding panel to reduce the number of municipal hospital workers to be laid off in the current fiscal crisis.

The recommendations are also subject to approval by the union.

But the union, District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees—which had threatened to strike if the layoffs were carried out—said it would withhold its approval until it had received more details on who would be laid off.

The panel's recommendations called for laying off 842 employees instead of the 1,750 whom the corporation had planned to discharge last Friday.

The three-man fact-finding panel, headed by Basil Paterson, a former State Senator, also called for a "task force" to be set up to determine what should be done about a second group of workers whom the corporation has proposed to lay off at the end of this month.

The panel's recommendations would leave the municipal hospitals with a deficit of at least $5.4 million, corporation officials said.

Larger Deficit Feared Because the recommendations also included keeping open the old Sydenham Hospital in Harlem, which the corporation had sought to close, there was some concern among corporation officials that the deficit might become larger because extensive renovations would have to be made to have the hospital comply with state codes.

No decisions have been made yet on what new economies would be undertaken to close the budget gap.

The corporation's board of directors, meeting at its headquarters at 125 Worth Street, voted to hold implementation of the panel's recommendations for 72 hours in the hope that the union, too, would have agreed by then.

Meanwhile, District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees set July 7 as the date for its strike against the city's voluntary hospitals.

NBC Head Urges Set Political 'Spots'

By LES BROWN

Herbert S. Schlosser, president of NBC, yesterday proposed that the three television networks act in concert in advance of the 1980 Presidential primaries to prevent the chaos that occurred this year in the scramble to purchase political time.

Mr. Schlosser suggested that the networks create in advance a reserve pool of 5-minute and 30-minute time periods for which candidates might place orders by a fixed date.

According to his plan, each network would provide an equal number of these time periods and submit the list to the national committees of the major parties and the equivalent organizations of minor parties,

Conceding that it would not be a perfect arrangement and that some candidates would probably continue to have unanticipated last-minute requirements for air time that could not be accommodated, Mr. Schlosser said that a "rational, preplanned" apportionment of time by the networks, nevertheless, would solve a large part of the problem.

Mr. Schlosser outlined his proposal in a luncheon address at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to affiliates of the NBC radio and television networks at the company's annual affiliates conference.

He noted that the sale of 30-second and one-minute political spots posed no problem during the primary campaigns, but that confusion was created by the demands for 5-minute and half-hour prime-time periods, usually on short notice.

"The 5-minute period is not readily available, because it just doesn't exist in the schedule. It usually has to be carved out of a completed program. A half-hour purchase means pre-empting a scheduled entertainment show," Mr. Schlosser pointed out.

He added that, to complicate matters, each sale of time to a candidate left the networks with a legal obligation to provide similar time for sale to all opposing candidates.

Therefore, he said, NBC could not honor a request by Senator Frank Church of Idaho for a prime-time network half-hour because it would have had to make available eight additional half-hours for the other candidates in the Pennsylvania primary.

Networks Are Unprepared. "Network schedules are arranged far in advance," Mr. Schlosser noted, "and the networks are not prepared for such orders."

But they were especially unprepared, he said, because candidates in the primaries have not usually ordered time on the national networks in the past. The normal procedure had been to advertise on local stations in the states where the primaries were being held.

Mr. Schlosser traced the change in campaigning strategies to the Campaign Financing Act of 1974, which provided primary candidates with increased funds for television advertising.

The candidates found it advantageous to buy network time for fund-raising appeals, which usually brought in more money than the program had cost. "When that money is matched by the Government," Mr. Schlosser said, "the candidates can buy more broadcast time, and the cycle can repeat itself."

He called the present system of selling political time "a patchwork of uncertainties and emergencies that satisfies nobody" and asserted that the networks now had sufficient time to work at solving the problem for the 1980 campaigns.

Stein Sues to Force Authorities To Seek Restitution by Bergman

By JOHN L. HESS

Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein filed suit yesterday to require authorities to halt Medicaid payments to Bernard Bergman, to move to recover $2.5 million in alleged overpayments to him and to take over his Park Crested Nursing Home in New York City.

Dr. Robert P. Whalen, the State Health Commissioner, commented: "If somebody orders me to, I'll be delighted."

Dr. Whalen recalled that he and the Public Health Council had formally expressed their concern for the welfare of the 520 patients in the Park Crested, at Riverside Drive and 87th Street. This followed the sentencing of Mr. Bergman last week to four months in a Federal detention center for Medicaid and tax fraud.

The Health Department has interpreted the law as requiring it to exhaust all administrative and legal proceedings before removing an operator who has been convicted of a crime. This could take years.

Dr. Whalen said he had discussed with Governor Carey's office legislation to permit him to name a receiver immediately in such cases. But the present session of the Legislature has one week to run, and no such bill has been submitted.

The suit by Assemblyman Stein, the East Side Democrat whose investigation helped lead the way to the nursing-home prosecutions, named the State Health Department and the state and city Social Service Departments as defendants.

Mr. Stein argued that the authorities had the power to act without delay to remove patients from the control of Bergman.

Dr. Whalen said his aides had sought in vain to persuade Mr. Bergman to turn the Park Crested over voluntarily to an operating receiver. He has refused to yield its records to a financial receiver, named at the request of creditors who say he has failed to pay mortgage, tax, fuel and milk bills.

Mr. Bergman faces a contempt proceeding on his refusal to surrender the records. He is also scheduled to be sentenced on July 2 in a bribery case.

A grand jury in Syracuse yesterday indicted Joseph Shaben, administrator of the Maple Lawn Nursing Home in Manlius on a charge of stealing $55,200 by padding Medicaid bills. He was the 31st person to be indicted on charges brought by Charles J. Eynes, the special prosecutor for nursing homes.

Fiscal Crises Keep the Lobbyists Busy

tree and try to make the Federal bureaucracy respond to the needs of their constituents. This involves fighting legislation that would affect their areas, helping to draft legislation and mounting legislative campaigns, in addition to the constant search for Federal funds.

"We are but one of a thousand interests here in Washington looking for an audience," said Mr. Larocca, a Staten Islander who previously served as legislative assistant to Representative John M. Murphy, Democrat of Manhattan and Staten Island, and on the staff of the National Commission on Water Quality. "We're dealing with a lot of interests that have more than merit to advance their positions. Things like campaign contributions and manpower, that we simply cannot offer."

Ideological Divisions

The New Yorkers' work also is impeded by the divisions within the state Congressional delegation, which is divided ideologically and geographically (upstate vs. downstate), and which is beset by internal competitiveness and personality clashes.

"You can't go out there and deal when it is known that you are in disarray," said Mr. Larocca, who directs a 12-man office. "I think it impedes our ability to tackle the discrimination against New York in the Congressional formulas."

All four lobbyists can point to millions of dollars in funds that they spotted in the Federal budget and applied for their constituencies—a $40 million housing grant for New York, a $70 million Veterans Administration hospital for New Jersey, a $500,000 prisoner training grant for Connecticut.

Successes Pointed To

Similarly, each can point to legislation that would have cost their constituents millions in Federal aid had they not flagged the bills and sent them to city or state commissioners for analysis.

Despite their diligence, however, important legislation sometimes goes unnoticed. Last December, for example, the Senate unanimously passed legislation that would cost New York State $200 million a year in Federal funds through 1980 by requiring the use of the mid-decade census in formulas in which population is a factor. New York and Rhode Island were the only states to lose population.

Unflagged by the state lobbyists, only a handful of Senators were in the Senate chamber at the time of the vote.

"It took everybody by surprise," said Mr. Kirschenbaum, who was Bronx-born, Manhattan-raised and who previously worked for Senator Jacob K. Javits, the Office of Economic Opportunity and the National Legal Aid and Defender Association. "It took 94 Senators and Jim and me by surprise."

Another Way Around

The New Yorkers mobilized quickly thereafter, however, and have worked with Representative Patricia Schroeder, Democrat of Colorado and chairman of the census subcommittee, to help draft legislation that would require the census to update the number of aged poor, so that New York would not lose funds.

"We used to try to keep on top of all legislation," Mr. Kirschenbaum said. "Since the fiscal crisis, however, we've limited our focus to a few areas where we have a say and let the rest go by the boards. We've concentrated on revenue-sharing, welfare reform, appropriations, water-pollution control funds and the clean air act."

The city and state lobbyists in the Federal Government sessions on important legislation where they did city and state Congressmen serving on the bill-drafting committees, succeeded in obtaining legislation that would ensure the Federal Government to grant New York City a delay in enforcement of air pollution standards.

They also worked on an amendment to the clean air act providing that when a locality was required to give matching funds, and maintain the same level of financing as the previous year, the locality would be excused if its reduction in funds was part of an overall budget reduction, as is the case of New York City.

"It was in the interests of most states to pass it," Mr. Kirschenbaum noted.

The legislation was introduced by a California, "so that it would not be known that New York was interested," Mr. Larocca said.

The Crisis Changed Things

It was the fiscal crisis, however, that gave the New York lobbyists their greatest challenge, direct access to the Governor and Mayor respectively, and a key role in both drafting loan and loan guarantee legislation and obtaining support.

Mr. Larocca and Mr. Kirschenbaum worked closely with the Senate and House Banking Committees. "They were like negotiating sessions," Mr. Larocca recalled.

It was Mr. Kirschenbaum who came up with the idea of a guaranteed taxable bond and persuaded Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin and chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, to accept the proposal, and helped orchestrate the support of the United States Conference of Mayors, National League of Cities, the National Association of County Organizations and the municipal finance officers.

Mr. Larocca, meanwhile, helped develop state-by-state, district-by-district data to inform the 435 members of the House, how a New York City default would harm their districts. The data included local banks holding municipal bonds, and local industries that had New York as a client.

"How to Get Things Done"

In contrast to the New York delegation, "our delegation" works together fairly well," said Miss Tannenbaum, a native of North Carolina who previously worked for the State of Ohio; Rowland Evans and Robert Novak, the columnists; former representative Allard K. Lowenstein and the late Robert F. Kennedy.

The main job of her two-person office, she says, is "to give state people a real idea of how things operate around here, and how to get things done."

Most of the tips on Federal funds come from the state commissioners, she said. "They'll call and they'll say, I hear that there's some money in this area. Oftentimes its clues—clues to criteria on grant priorities, what kind of things are the Federal people looking for. How we can make our application a little different."

Tailoring Legislation

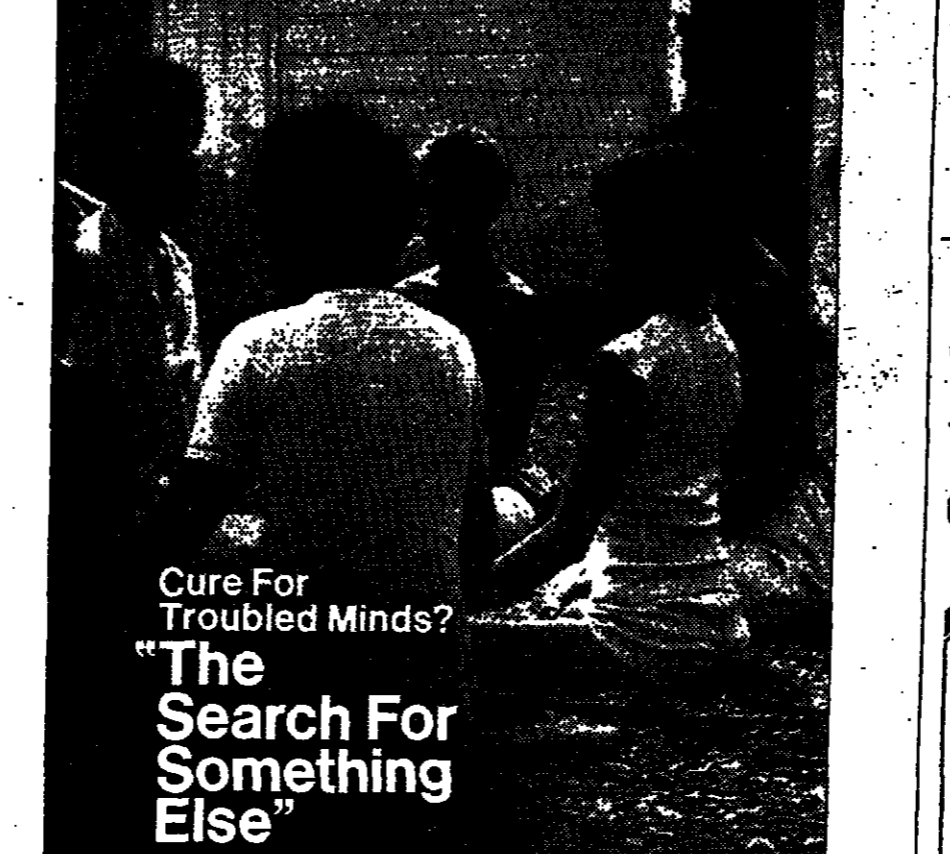

Marilyn Berry, who directs a staff of six persons, benefits from the seniority of the New Jersey delegation, which is led by Senator Harrison A. Williams Jr. "With Pete Williams as chairman of Labor and Public Welfare, our office is able to take the lead on labor legislation," she said.

"So many of them have senior positions, and they realize that if they pull together they'll have an impact," she added.

The objective of her office, she says, is "to tailor legislation to meet New Jersey's problems."

In addition to obtaining funds for a V.A. hospital, Miss Berry was instrumental in the award of $29 million for job opportunities, and $2.5 million for restoration of Liberty Park, a blighted area behind the Statue of Liberty.

television in the concept of a "cable sub-channel" for programming such as movies (unmodified), or newly commissioned material not subject to the barriers of standards and regulations. The network is still relatively new, with 450,000 subscribers in the New York area. It spends time on programming for subscribers and on Home Box Office. The network is currently in the process of being sold to Time Warner.

in Cleveland, the program was called from three Midler shows performed on Feb. 7 and 8. Miss Midler has been seen on commercial television, once on the former "Cher" show in a notably unsuccessful exhibition of her peculiar talents. For pay-TV, she was presented straight, so to speak, and undistorted—sweet, vulgarly and all.

I am not a Midler fanatic. Her camp and hysteria can verge on monotony. She is, however, an outrageous phenomenon, and this production captured all the appropriate tricks and nuances. Miss Midler's energy is fascinating. Her singing is off-key. Her dancing is perfunctory. Her vulgarity ("Let's sing some nasty songs and tell some nasty stories") is obvious in both language and gesture. But she works furiously, stamping all over the stage, throwing herself on the floor, hustling the audience ("My, what a quiet, tasteful little group"), mugging for the cameras ("We are recording this performance for posterity"), screaming for attention.

In the end, she wins, or at least overwhelms. I stayed with Miss Midler and was glad I did. Her incredible dress of ruffles out of Polly Dechum by way of "The Threepenny Opera," her imitation of Shelley Winters in "The Posidon Adventure," her Sophie Tucker routines, her entrance stretched across the palm of a giant King Kong, her routines with a superb three-woman supporting group—whatever the faults or reservations, the result added up to remarkable television. Pay TV proved that it could be exceptionally impressive—for a weekend.

It's never too late to become the real you.
